Japan Proposes New Navy Pact; Insists on Parity

Partly Accepts British Compromise as Basis for Agreement,

Stand on Equality Bars Hope of Pact

10-Year Treaty a Part of Suggestions Made by Delegates.

London, Nov. 30 (AP).—Japan tonight proposed new efforts to reach an agreement on naval limitation—but insisted that agreement must give her full equality in naval armaments.

Tsuneo Matsudaira, Japanese Ambassador to London, told Norman H. Davis, United States Ambassador-at-large, Tokyo was willing to try to reach an understanding on the basis of recent British compromise proposals. A ten-year treaty was envisaged in the British suggestions.

Matsudaira, however, said Japan would insist that the treaty provide full equality for the Japanese navy, refusing to accept the British thesis that the principle of equality might be recognized and equality in fact withheld.

Prospect Little Brighter.

Thus the prsopect for an ultimate favorable outcome of the tri-power conversations, in progress here for several months, appeared little brighter tonight despite the new Japanese move.

Naval circles at first believed Matsudaira, in his conference with Davis, had indicated the Japanese might yield on their original proposlas in which they demanded equality.

Later, however, it was learned authoritatively that the Japanese not only stand as firmly as ever for abolishment of the present 5-5-3 ratio, but that they believed the outlook for compromise actually no better than before.

The naval treaty, under the British plan, would last for ten years, split into two five-year periods. Each power would state its naval needs for the first five years on a unilateral basis in conformity with the general category limitations now existing under the Washington treaty.

Will Renounce Treaty.

This treaty, signed in 1922, Japan had already decided to renounce before the end of this year, and the conversations here were called in an effort to work out bases of another agreement to take its place.

An air of optimism prevailing today both in the Japanese and British delegations had puzzled the Americans, and they were surprised at the new Japanese overture. Great Britain's representatives, however, had been informed previously that the development might be expected.

No one concerned would venture an opinion as to whether the Japanese offer meant that an agreement among the three powers is possible, but the Americans began an immediate study of the situation.

Anglo-U. S. Talk Today.

Previously the prevailing optimism had been ascribed to the belief held by both the British and the Japanese that the other ultimately would yield on the equality issue.

Army-Navy Game Of Pass-the-Buck Played in Capital

With the Army-Navy game being played in Philadelphia today, the War Department will be in charge of a brigadier general and the Navy Department will be headed by a rear admiral.

Secretary Dern delegated authority to Assistant Secretary Harry Woodring. He passed it on to Chief of Staff Douglas MacArthur, who in turn put the responsibility on Maj. Gen. Hugh Drum. But Drum had no intention of remaining "it," and so made Maj. Gen. James McKinley the boss. McKinley shoved the job along, too, but in doing so, made it stick.

He delegated authority to Brig. Gen. Edgar T. Conley and at the same time ordered Conley to stay in Washington.

Meantime, both Secretary Swanson and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt had planned to go to Philadelphia, which, with Admiral Standley, chief of naval operations, in London, made it look bad for Rear Admiral William Leahy, chief of the Bureau of Navigation. Leahy, however, is not one to miss an Army-Navy game if he can help it, and neither is Rear Admiral S. M. Robinson.

The authority landed finally on the shoulders of Rear Admiral Harold Stark, who ought to get together with Gen. Conley and do something about it.

2 Officers Will Face Trial for 'Negligence' in Ship Tragedy.

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—The acting captain and chief engineer of the ill-fated Morro Castle, which burned at sea with a loss of 134 lives, were arrested late today and arraigned before a United States commissioner on charges of negligence, misconduct and inattention to duty.

William F. Warms, the acting captain, and Eben S. Abbott, the chief engineer, were released in bail of $2,500 each to await a hearing December 12 before Commissioner Garrett W. Cotter.

Federal statutes covering the case, which Assistant District Attorney W. F. H. Adams described as a "very serious crime," provide a maximum penalty of ten years' imprisonment and a fine of $10,000.

The complaints against the ship's officers, filed by special Department of Justice agents, charged that as a result of their "misconduct, negligence and inattention" to duties, "the lives of upward of 50 persons were destroyed."

Grand jurors who investigated accusations of criminal negligence in the disaster deliberated during the afternoon in private, but no indictment was returned. The grand jury, it was reported, will meet again on Monday, when its three months' tenure expires.

Warms and Abbott, who previously had been before the grand jury, were pacing the long corridor outside the jury room when a bailiff arrived to escort them to the commissioner's court for arraignment.

Both the officers, with three others aboard the Morro Castle at the time of the holocaust, also are on trial before steamboat inspectors for possible revocation of their licenses.

They have denied any negligence.

900 to Keep Alcohol Jobs Without Pay

'Chaos' Threat Averted, Repeal of McKellar Bill Indicated.

The 900 alcohol tax investigators won their first battle in their fight to retain their jobs yesterday when Secretary Morgenthau issued an order that they might remain on duty although their pay stopped as December arrived.

The order was issued on the basis of an opinion of Attorney General Cummings that the McKellar "patronage" proviso "does not change or affect their status as employes in the Treasury Department, except with respect to the payment of their salaries."

Telegrams were immediately sent by the Internal Revenue Bureau to all district supervisors to inform the investigators, who had previously been informed of their dismissal, effective today, of the Secretary's order.

By giving the investigators an opportunity to retain their jobs in the hope that Congress would pay them subsequently, Secretary Morgenthau acted in accordance with the almost unanimous view of official Washington that the McKellar proviso will be repealed or modified and that the employes will be reinstated.

Combat Bootlegging.

The order also relieved the Treasury Department of the threatening embarrassment of entering the holiday season with only a fourth of the agents whose duty it is to combat bootlegging.

Coincident with announcement of the order, a report was circulated in the Treasury Department that Secretary Morgenthau will ask new legislation of Congress to aid his campaign to stamp out the illicit sale of liquor.

The Secretary has been concentrating for some time on the anti-bootlegging campaign and was engaged in building up the alcohol tax unit from 1,400 to 1,800 men when the McKellar rider threatened to wreck his previous efforts. He predicted that chaos would follow if the 900 were dismissed.

Brig. Gen. Samuel T. Ansell, counsel for some of the employes involved, predicted last night that practically every one of the investigators will remain on the job until Congress decides whether they are to remain and be paid.

Urged to Stay at Posts.

Earlier in the week he had advised all investigators who could be reached not to surrender their badges or commission but to rest assured that Congress will not allow them to go unpaid for their loyalty in the face of an Administration crisis.

Gen. Ansell made public yesterday a letter he had written to Secretary Morgenthau last Tuesday setting forth the legal basis on which an order might be issued allowing the investigators to retain their jobs.

The following day the Secretary

Peru Puts Down Revolt in Andes

Casualties Heavy as Rebels Are Routed.

Lima, Peru, Nov. 30 (U.P.).—Loyal troops put down a revolt in the Andes Mountains today, centering in Ayacucho and Huancavelica. The rebels fled from both towns after battling with government forces rushed into the area. Heavy casualties were reported among the insurgents.

The rebels executed a priest, Ambrosio Ruis Del Valle. They also shot a police lieutenant and a detective before evacuating Huancavelica. One sergeant and a private were among the wounded in the loyalist forces. The town was recaptured after two hours of severe fighting.

The rebels fled toward Castro Virreina. They were reported led by Cirilo Cornejo, a lawyer from Aprista.

'Stowaway,' 8, Says He Did It To Be With U. S. School 'Kids'

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—Not as a stowaway but a paid-after-sailing, first-class passenger, 8-year-old Carroll Livingston Wainwright reached New York today aboard the Queen of Bermuda after a runaway adventure prompted by a desire "to go to school with American kids like myself."

The son of the former Edith Kingdon Gould, now the wife of Sir Hector MacNeal, British shipowner, Carroll secreted himself aboard the vessel at Hamilton, Bermuda, and his absence from home created a short-lived kidnap scare. When he was found in the New York-bound ship arrangements were made by wireless for payment of his passage.

"Hello, grandma, are you mad with me?" the boy shouted to Mrs. Carl F. Woolf, when she met him at the pier.

"Not a bit," Mrs. Woolf replied, "just glad to see you."

"Gee, I had a swell time," the excited youth continued. "I was on the bridge lots of times; I examined the instruments and I steered the ship.

"The captain is a grand guy; he had me with him all the time and we went everywhere on the ship."

Already irked by the British school in Bermuda, Carroll told his grandparents that with Thanksgiving just a day ahead, he couldn't keep it up and on Wednesday decided to take matters into his own hands.

After the vessel sailed, the boy emerged from the cabin in which he had hidden and went to see the master, Capt. Jeffries Davis, who wirelessed Sir Hector and Mrs. MacNeal.

"It was jolly having him aboard," Capt. Davis said. "He is a bright, sturdy lad and I have had him with me throughout the voyage."

Dern and Swanson to Be Among Notables at Classic; Middies Are 8-to-5 Favorites; Exodus From Capital Under Way.

By Shirley L. Povich.

Philadelphia, Nov. 30.—Quartered in seclusion tonight on the banks of the Schuylkill, the Army and Navy football squads await the morrow, when their privacy will be shattered by 80,000 pairs of eyes fastened on Franklin Field.

On a traditional battle ground fringed with the gold braid of the military, its edges banked with officials and social leaders, the Navy team will take the field as a pre-game favorite over West Point in their thirty-fifth annual clash.

Rains of the last two days have dampened everything but the anticipation of the ticket holders and the hopes of the ticket seekers. The latter tonight were paying as high as $100 per pair to the speculators for seats within the 20-yard lines.

Lured by the prospects of the hardest-fought service classic since 1926, with Navy in the role of a favorite for the first time in a decade, thousands of Washingtonians will be among the noncombatants in the huge Gothic structure that is the University of Pennsylvania's varsity field.

The exodus from the Capital began yesterday with hundreds of Washingtonians attending the Thanksgiving Day battle of Penn and Cornell here. Throughout today trains emptied their cargoes of Washingtonians, but the bulk of Capital fans will descend on the city tomorrow morning by train, auto and plane.

Heading the high officialdom from the Capital will be Secretary of War Dern and Secretary of the Navy Swanson to sit on opposite

France Wants Proof Hitler's Aim Is Peace

Paris, Nov. 30 (AP).—Foreign Minister Pierre Laval today asked Adolf Hitler to translate his words of peace into "acts."

Simultaneously Joachim von Ribbentrop, Hitler's personal emissary, was reported seeking to prepare the way for joint action of French and German World War veterans to lessen the French fear of Hitler.

Laval, outlining the nation's foreign policies before the Chamber of Deputies, also said that France and Russia stand together to guarantee the peace of eastern Europe.

"Russia is fully in accord with us on the conception of a collective enterprise in which she shares the initiative with us," he said. "Franco-Soviet solidarity is expressing itself openly for the benefit of all and for the consolidation of the peace of eastern Europe."

Negotiations With Italy.

Laval declared relations between France and Italy had improved greatly and said negotiations between the two were proceeding "satisfactorily."

He insisted, nevertheless, that the projected Franco-Italian understanding would be incomplete unless it assured "all guarantees of closer relations between Italy and the Little Entente, especially Yugoslavia."

The foreign minister asserted France has no intention of engaging in separate negotiations with Germany.

"Germany has been invited and will again be invited to participate on the same conditions as other countries in an eastern pact of mutual assistance whereby she is assured of obtaining the same guarantees as those which are given other

Parole System In D. C. Draws Fire of Brown

Release of 150 Felons Is Hit at First Session of Investigators.

The wisdom of releasing 150 District prisoners before expiration of their maximum sentences was questioned by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday.

The implied criticism of the existing system of parole and indeterminate sentences was voiced by the police head at the first public meeting of the special committee appointed to investigate the District parole machinery.

Maj. Brown presented records of 1" released prisoners who had, he said, "violated some law" since they had been paroled. He presented another list of 11 instances in which prisoners with "long criminal records" had been released after they had served a fraction of their maximum sentences. No names were mentioned.

Investigating Committee.

The investigating committee is composed of Commissioner George E. Allen, E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel; Maj. Brown, and Wilbur La Roe, Jr., parole board members. The meeting was held in the office of Commissioner Allen.

Public hearings are to be begun by the committee at 2 p. m. Tuesday. The hearings are to be held in Commissioner Allen's office. The committee plans to hear first the testimony of those who know something of the problem, whose views, consequently, should carry weight.

Invitations to attend are to be sent to Sanford Bates, superintendent of Federal prisons; Elwood Street, director of public welfare of the District; Capt. M. M. Barnard, superintendent of District penal institutions; Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president of the District Federation

Road Bureau Ousts 1,000 In Maryland

Puts Remaining 2,000 Employes on Part Time Basis.

$4,914,418 of Revenue Due in 1935 Found Encumbered.

Baltimore, Nov. 30 (AP).—Repercussions of the Maryland State Roads Commission's overdrafts and unpaid bills—totaling approximately $1,320,000—were felt through the State today as Harry D. Williar, jr., chief engineer, announced the dismissal of approximately 1,000 men, or a third of its labor force. The remaining two-thirds were put on a part-time basis. An indication of the commission's financial condition was shown by the fact that $4,914,418.39 of its 1935 revenue, about 25 per cent, already is encumbered.

In the engineering department of the roads body, officials estimated about 45 construction engineers, a dozen draftsmen and 20 surveyors will be furloughed as projects are completed. None of them, it was explained will be dismissed outright, but will be on call in event of emergency.

Part-Time Work Basis.

"We are placing the remainder of our field staff—about 2,000 men—on a part-time basis," Williar said, "in an attempt to spread out this necessary economy as much as we can. Otherwise, we should have to dismiss many more men and probably throw them on relief rolls."

William A. Codd, commission auditor, who yesterday announced the commission would begin immediately to cut down expenses by about $187,000 monthly, said the savings would be effected by using up material already in stock and by reductions in personnel and operating expenses.

No figures on the exact number of men dismissed or furloughed will be available until reports are received from the District engineers early next week.

Ritchie's Comment.

Asked how the commission was permitted to overspend its revenues, Gov. Albert C. Ritchie said there was no State officer to keep track of the expenditures in the various departments.

The Governor said he realized his own responsibility in the matter and had no desire to shirk it, but added he was neither a bookkeeper nor an auditor.

Meanwhile, persons familiar with the commission's finances, estimated that with $400,000 this month, and the same amount next month, accruing from the gasoline tax, plus motor vehicle license receipts, the commission will be able to pay its bills in December.

By withholding payments on account of county road maintenance in the winter months, it was said, the commission will be able to liquidate the $726,081 county overdraft by next April.

In a statement after his investigation of the situation had been completed, Gov. Ritchie summed up the commission's difficulties as (1) "it has not enough cash to pay its outstanding bills." (2) "It has overpaid or overobligated itself, or both, to a number of counties."

"The truth is," the Governor said, "the commission simply spent all its money and incurred bills in addition.

"There seems to be no possible way of justifying the situation. There does seem to be no question about the propriety of the purpose of any of the expenditures or overpayments. All appear to have been made for bona fide road work and for debt service on county bonds.

"So that, simply as a matter of information, it is at least true that more road work was done and that the taxpayers were relieved of charges for debt service which otherwise they would have had to pay."

Mary Pickford Acts to Expunge Scandal From Suit on Contract

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—Mary Pickford's attorneys went to court today to keep allegedly scandalous charges out of a $250,000 breach of contract suit against the one-time "America's Sweetheart."

Federal Judge Robert P. Patterson reserved decision on the petition for an order to prohibit Edward Hemmer, who claims he was Miss Pickford's manager, adviser and protector for 13 years, from presenting sensational evidence in his suit.

Hemmer's latest amended bill of particulars, the issue in court today, related alleged events that preceded Miss Pickford's marriage to Douglas Fairbanks, while she still was the wife of Owen Moore.

Fairbanks and the golden-haired actress now are estranged.

Hemmer's bill portrayed the athletic Fairbanks in a characteristic movie role in 1919—leaping a fence in flight from a set near Hollywood—with the manager purportedly pursuing him with a pistol.

The reason for this incident, Hemmer alleged, was a "tip" from the actress' mother that Fairbanks was on his way to the dressing room of Miss Pickford, then Mrs. Moore.

Only a short time previously, he claimed, he had pursued Fairbanks from the Lambs Club.

During either 1919 or 1920, Hemmer also set forth, Miss Pickford's mother, known as "Mrs. Pickford," asked him to try to persuade Moore "to refrain from giving Mary a divorce" or obtaining one until "the defendant should have had an opportunity to overcome her infatuation for Fairbanks."

Later, the petition contended, Mrs. Charlotte Smith, Miss Pickford's mother, asked Hemmer "to object to the payment of $150,000

Job Relief Drive Of Nine Billions Up to Roosevelt

Proposals for Big Fund Will Be Offered at Parley Today.

Hopkins and Ickes To See President

Moffett Confers With Executive, Declares Controversy Over.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Reports that President Roosevelt will be asked over the week-end to approve plans calling for expenditures ranging from $5,000,000,000 to $9,000,000,000 during the next year in a concerted attack on the relief and unemployment problem yesterday left Washington observers somewhat breathless and representatives of business groups here alarmed.

At the same time it became evident that the demands of the Ickes-Hopkins faction in the Administration for continued and accelerated spending was plowing a deep cleavage within the ranks of Mr. Roosevelt's Cabinet and advisers. Although refraining from public comment, some of the conservatives within the Administration were obviously disturbed.

Parley Set by Roosevelt.

This situation became known as Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins and Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes left for Warm Springs, Ga., to meet with President Roosevelt in a momentous conference to formulate the broad outline of the Administration's future relief employment policies.

Meanwhile President Roosevelt conferred at length with Federal Housing Administrator James A. Moffett regarding the latter's controversy with Secretary Ickes over the extent of a PWA housing program. Dispatches reported that on leaving the President Mr. Moffett appeared chastened and met questions about the controversy with the statement, "that's all straightened out now."

Due to confusion of terms, however, it was not quite clear whether the President had fully approved the Ickes proposal which inspired the conflict or whether he had only indorsed plans for an extensive low-cost housing program in connection with slum clearance and homestead subsistence projects. Mr. Ickes a week ago proposed a Nation-wide low-cost housing program independent of slum clearance.

Will Propose Relief Plan.

At this conference, which will convene today and continue tomorrow, Mr. Hopkins will propose to the President formation of a Federal work relief corporation with an appropriation of $8,000,000,000 or $9,000,000,000. The purpose of the corporation would be to sponsor projects to give employment to persons now on relief rolls.

The end Mr. Hopkins has in view is the total elimination of Federal disbursements for direct relief. His plan contemplates giving work on Federal projects to all those capable of working until they can be absorbed by private industry and returning to the States and local communities the care of those too old or otherwise incapable of working.

The Hopkins plan is described as contemplating the speedy establishment of an expansive program of subsistence homestead, slum-clearance, low-cost housing and rural rehabilitation projects.

Ickes Ready to End Dole.

The program visioned by Mr. Hopkins would infringe on the PWA program now under jurisdiction of Secretary Ickes. The latter, however, favors the idea of ending direct relief disbursements as quickly as possible and transferring the unemployed to projects with a social value for the Nation.

Mr. Ickes, with that aim, also has worked out a program to lay before the President. His program, it is reported, would call for approximately $5,000,000,000 to be spent on low-cost housing projects, grade-crossing elimination, rural electrification and highway work—projects which the PWA administrator believes could be started with a minimum of delay.

Both programs, as well as schemes being put forth by others in the Roosevelt Administration, are in a

Alfonso Holds Secret Parley; Dictator Seen

Sees His Loyal Deputy; Gil Robles Mentioned to Direct Coup.

Rome, Nov. 30 (AP).—A secret conference between former King Alfonso of Spain and his erstwhile minister of interior had served today to raise to fever pitch Italians' discussion of the possibility of dictatorship in Spain.

After conferring with Alfonso at Villa Ruffo here, he returned as he had come. He came and went without the immediate knowledge of the Spanish embassies to Rome and the Holy See.

Fascists Excited.

Italy's Fascists, many of whom have expressed the feeling that dictatorship in Spain is the only way to avert complete chaos, and the four groups of Spaniards here—the exiled monarchists, the leftist intellectuals, the Spanish clerics and the diplomats—assigned considerable importance to Goicochea's visit.

It was recalled that Goicochea was one Spanish deputy fervently loyal to the monarchy, and it was considered probable he made the trip to get Alfonso's approval for restoration of the Monarchist Party in Spain.

What would be the former ruler's reaction to this proposal was not known. A spokesman at his villa said Goicochea wished merely to congratulate Alfonso on the forthcoming marriage of his daughter, the Infanta Beatriz, to Prince Alessandro Torlonia of Italy.

Despite the king's ostensible preoccupation with the wedding, it has been hinted he is keeping his eyes on the political situation in Spain. He has said, however, he does not consider the time ripe for any personal political gesture or declaration.

Gil Robles Mentioned.

His retainers also maintain more than casual interest in the Madrid government. The name most fre-

Estate Values Subject to New Treasury Rule

Regulation Put in Effect as Part of Program to Plug 'Leaks.'

A new Treasury regulation in the fixing of estate valuations where there are large blocks of securities has been signed by Secretary Morgenthau and is now in effect, it became known for the first time yesterday. The regulation was signed on Tuesday, and if upheld by the courts in expected litigation it will add materially to the Government's revenues from inheritance taxes on large estates. It is understood to be part of an Administration program for a tightening up on tax levies and the plugging up of tax "leaks."

The new regulation provides that henceforth the value of securities for tax purposes is to be fixed at the mean between the high and low quotations on the New York or other stock exchanges as of the date of death. Until now the practice has been to allow a deduction of from 1 to 10 per cent from the quoted prices where an unusually large amount of one issue of a stock or bond is involved. This was done on the theory that a nominal stock or bond transaction on the date of death did not necessarily establish the true value of the security. Where large blocks of stock are held in an estate it is often impossible to find a market for them, and when an attempt is made to liquidate the holdings the price is depressed far below the market quotation on a nominal transaction.

The new regulation provides that "the size of holding of any security to be included in the gross estate is not a relevant factor and will not be considered in such determination."

Attorneys Surprised.

Tax attorneys in Washington, New York and Chicago expressed surprise yesterday at such a radical change in policy and freely predicted that the Secretary's action would not be upheld by the courts. In the past, when attorneys for large estates have not been satisfied by the deductions allowed by the Bureau of Internal Revenue the cases have been taken to the courts and frequently the bureau has been overruled and a lower valuation established.

One such case was recently decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, tax attorneys pointed out. This was the case of Lavina R. Strong vs. John J. Rogers, collector. It involved the valuation of stocks of the Continental Insurance Co. and the Fidelity-Phoenix Fire Insurance Co. The mean quotation between the highest and lowest prices on the New York Stock Exchange on the date of death was $91.187 for the Continental stock and $109.187 in the case of the Fidelity-Phoenix stock. An appeal from this valuation to the United States District Court was taken by the attorneys for the estate and the district court held that a valuation of $55 per share for the Continental stock and of $65 per share for the Fidelity-Phoenix stock should be taken by the bureau for tax purposes. This decision was upheld by the circuit court.

With estate tax rates running as high as 60 per cent for estates of $10,000,000 and over, tax attorneys estimated that under the new regulation, virtually everything above that figure would be taken by the Government in taxes. This is due to the fact that where large blocks of stock are involved, the securities can be sold only at private sale to other substantial interests, and then only at a tremendous mark-down. Hence, if the new plan of valuations is upheld in court tests, most of the proceeds from such sales would go to pay the 60 per cent tax, leaving little or nothing for heirs and beneficiaries.

Ready to Test Legality.

Attorneys for large estates have known of the impending ruling for several months and it is understood that preparations have already been made to test the legality of the regulation. Secretary Morgenthau was understood to have directed an inquiry into the method of determing valuations last June and at that time to have instructed bureau officials to prepare such a regulation. It is understood that there was considerable opposition to the change among bureau officials, but the Secretary insisted that no question of valuations should be a matter of negotiation.

At the time the regulation was first under consideration, acting upon instructions from Secretary Morgenthau, the Bureau of Internal Revenue began a general tightening up on all tax cases. Generally speaking, offers in compromise are now being refused, the Government insisting upon the original tax levy in each case and leaving all disputes to litigation before the board of tax appeals and the courts. Tax attorneys expect that if this policy is continued the calendars in the board of tax appeals will soon become so congested as to delay the settlement of cases for years.

The lawyers who are opposed to the new ruling point to a decision of the United States Supreme Court for their reliance that they will be able to have it set aside. This was the case of Heiner vs. Donnan, in which the court held there can be no conclusive presumption of fact in establishing valuations. In this instance, the attorneys point out, the Treasury Department would take a stock exchange quotation as a conclusive presumption of fact and attorneys for estates are barred from introducing evidence to show that the quotation does not represent a true value.

Price Irks President, But He'll Sell Beeves

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 30 (AP).—Franklin D. Roosevelt, farmer, decided today to sell 40 head of his cattle, but complained bitterly of the "terrible" price.

He talked things over for almost an hour with Otis Moore, manager of the 1,750-acre Roosevelt farm, and both agreed it was time to sell some of the Hereford beef cattle. Most shook their heads at the price.

Between You and Me

Worthless Stock 'Boiler Rooms' Still Operating When They Can Elude SEC Agents.

By Raymond Clapper

NO one should think that just because a Securities Exchange Commission has been set up to regulate the stock market that it is safe to buy any scrap of engraved paper that a salesman offers.

Right now salesmen are selling mining stock, registered and all in good order, which will never yield any profits except those the salesman makes.

What are known as "boiler rooms" are still operating whenever they can elude SEC agents. These "boiler rooms" are operated by trained squads of telephone stock salesmen who rent a room, install a battery of telephones and go to work. Some of them operating on a long-distance telephone basis, each salesman having in front of him as he talks a three-minute sand-glass. He is expected to close his prospect before the overtime charge starts. One such "boiler room" ran up a telephone bill of more than $100,000 in one month.

They still haven't found a law that will keep a sucker and his money together.

Returning visitors from Warm Springs say that with Mr. Roosevelt the more important the matter under consideration is, the more informal he becomes.

A few nights ago Mr. Roosevelt sat down with a group of advisers to discuss his power policy, one of the major phases of his future program. In the group were Frank R. McNinch, chairman of the Federal Power Commission; Basil Manley, vice chairman of the Federal Power Commission; David Lilienthal, a member of the Tennessee Valley Authority; Morris L. Cooke, utility expert, and Dr. Rex Tugwell, who was there on general principles.

They settled down for a five-hour evening conference. Mr. Roosevelt assembled them in the private dining room at Georgia Hall on the Warm Springs Foundation. While they leaned over the table, talking and drinking black coffee, just around the end of the corridor patients of the foundation were having their nightly fun.

Gus Gennerich, the iron-muscled Secret Service attache, pounded out Bowery songs on an old piano. Nurses, patients, visitors, and Secret Service men sang and danced. Gus is a favorite among the youngsters. To them he is Dick Tracy in person.

Incidentally, some who have been to Warm Springs report that Dr. Rex Tugwell is in on everything. With Mr. Roosevelt it is "Rex" this and "Rex" that. Often in a conference he turns to Tugwell for a suggestion. He not only isn't out but he is in closer than ever, apparently.

The Home Owners Loan Corporation has almost completed its decentralization program by setting up seven regional offices. Owing to shortage of office space in Washington some HOLC divisions have been working night shifts, the day crew turning over its desks and papers to the second relay. HOLC bought the Acacia office building, but even that didn't give it space enough to permit everyone to work daylight hours.

Senator James Couzens, who who has been a very independent Republican during his career in the Senate, may be even more independent when he comes up for reelection in 1936, because there is talk among Michigan Republicans of refusing to renominate him and thus forcing him to run on a mugwump ticket. Some of the soreness is due to his refusal to campaign this year for the reelection of his Republican colleague, Senator Arthur Vandenberg.

Meantime, Democrats are having plenty of inside trouble in Michigan. Some of them feel that if the Michigan Democratic national committeeman, Horatio Abbott, had worked more effectively with all factions, they might have beaten Vandenberg. Now most of the sympathy in the high command here is for Frank A. Picard, defeated Senatorial candidate. He will be consulted from now on on all Federal appointments in Michigan, although the Administration will continue to go through the formality of consulting its national committeeman, Abbott.

One odd angle is that high Administration officials are said to have assured Senator Couzens some time back that they would not appoint anyone in Michigan not acceptable to him, so he stands in the back field in a position to kick over any compromise deals made.

On top of all of that, Secretary of Treasury Morgenthau refuses to have anything to do with Abbott who resigned his Internal Revenue post in Michigan by request after some of his assistants were found soliciting campaign contributions. Abbott's recommendation is poison for anyone looking for a job under the Treasury.

It's all very confusing.

The Department of Agriculture is making increasing use of Assistant Secretary M. L. Wilson as a speaker at farm meetings. He goes over better than the college professor type. The funny thing though, is that M. L. is a college professor. Not only that, he developed the domestic allotment plan which formed the basis of AAA, was brought into the original Brain Trust group and therefore rates as a founder member of the All-American New Deal team.

But he is able to keep most of this a secret when he goes before a farm audience. He looks like a farmer, speaks with the slow farm belt drawl, and makes his audience feel that he'd know on which side to milk a cow.

Supreme Court Test of Labor Bargaining Due

Action Expected as Houde Prosecution Is Begun in New York.

Prosecution of the Houde Engineering Co., begun in Buffalo, N. Y., yesterday by the Justice Department, was expected to bring a Supreme Court test of section 7(a), the recovery act collective bargaining guarantee.

Court action was considered a victory for Francis Biddle, Philadelphia clubman, who has been urging initiation of the proceedings since his appointment a fortnight ago as chairman of the National Labor Relations Board. He regards the so-called majority rule decision as epoch-making.

Justice officials asked the court to order the company to bargain exclusively with the United Automobile Workers Federal Union, an American Federation of Labor affiliate, and to require the firm to refrain from interfering with or coercing employes.

A decision will clear the air, fogged by conflicting official interpretations placed on the labor board's ruling that the Automobile Workers Union should be the exclusive collective bargaining representative of all employes in the plant because it won a special election over a company-sponsored union by 1,105 to 674.

Indications that the Administration wished to hedge on the Labor Board's edict were seen recently when Donald R. Richberg, recovery coordinator, declared the ruling had been misunderstood.

"No one," he observed, "has ever been given any authority under the law and I doubt whether any one could be given legal authority to herd all employes or any number of employes into a voting unit and then compel them to select their representatives by majority vote.

"I submit there would be serious question of the constitutionality of any law which sought to compel men to unite for the protection of their private interests with those with whom they were unwilling to associate."

The National Association of Manufacturers has encouraged members to disobey the Houde ruling. The Houde Blue Eagle was removed by the NRA after the firm refused to comply.

Borah Assails Plan Involving New Naval Race

Calls It 'Sheer Madness'; Japanese Envoy Visits Phillips.

As official circles indicated a keen interest in reports from London that the Japanese delegates to the naval conversations were ready to discuss compromise proposals, Senator William S. Borah, of Idaho, ranking Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, yesterday started a backfire on agitation for American naval construction within theframework of the 5-5-3 ratio.

Senator Borah termed "sheer madness" a naval building race among the United States, Japan and Great Britain, warning that "naval races always have led to war." He said the time had arrived when" those who must pay the bills and those who must do the fighting and dying in case such things lead to war," should be heard.

Several days ago, Chairman Carl Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, asserted that if the Washington treaty is terminated by Japan and all efforts to agree on limitation fail, he favored this country maintaining the existing ratios by building five ships for three constructed by Japan.

Admiral in Accord.

His statement was a reflection of the views generally held by the American Admiralty. Senator Borah's on the other hand, was the first voice raised denouncing such a course as "sheer madness," especially by countries, he added, which "if called upon by sheriff's notice would be close to bankrupt." His viewpoint was similar to that expressed recently in a newspaper article by Viscount Makoto Saito, former Premier of Japan.

Meanwhile a visit by Japanese Ambassador Hirosi Saito to Undersecretary of State William Phillips yesterday caused a stir. It was thought hte ambassador had called to serve Japan's notice for a termination of the treaty. But he denied this was his purpose, asserting that he came on "a routine business" mission. His visit was brief.

Although the State Department remained silent ,those in charge of the naval negotiations eagerly scrutinized dispatches that the Japanese representatives at London had indicated they would present a compromise plan, along the lines of a recent British suggestion, to end the deadlock.

Japan Still Firm.

Interest in the news, however, subsequently subsided somewhat when it was reported that the Japanese had not altered their demand for unqualified parity with the British and American fleets.

Mr. Saito said he had received no details of the new development, but indicated he would not be surprised by a compromise offer from his colleagues in London. On his return from Tokyo several weeks ago, Mr. Saito indicated the possibility of agreement on a plan which would give Japan eventual parity.

Unded this scheme Japan would not increase its navy, but the United States and Great Britain would gradually bring their fleets down to the Japanese tonnage by failing to replace obsolete vessels regarded as offensive in character.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

A 21,000-ton steel purchase by the Reclamation Bureau yesterday emphasized collapse of New Deal attempts to outlaw identical bids on public contracts.

Amid scenes reminiscent of an Irish Sweepstakes lottery, Col. W. B. Fry, Interior Department purchasing agent, drew from a hat a tiny pellet on which was written the name of Inland Steel Co., one of the five corporations which submitted similar bids of $1,180,401.40.

The steel sheet piling will be used to divert the swirling current of the Columbia River in construction at Almyra, Wash., of the first unit of the Grand Coulee Dam, termed by some "the Roosevelt Folly" because many officials, including Secretary Ickes, think the $63,000,000 power project will virtually go to waste in such a barren locality.

Caused Roosevelt to Act.

President Roosevelt in June took cognizance of the storm of criticism against identical bids by ordering the NRA to permit firms competing for Federal, State or municipal contracts to cut 15 per cent below the prices they filed with code authorities.

The President hoped the procedure he proposed not only would do away with the mass of identical bids but would force down prices to the man in the street. Obviously unwilling to see quotations to the general public driven down by such a device, steel manufacturers and industry generally have continued to harass Government purchasing agents with identical offers. The next move is up to Mr. Roosevelt. There is a distinct possibility he will seek a solution by legislation when the new Congress revamps the NRA.

Bidding Called a Farce.

Observers recalled that the turbulent Darrow Review Board complained that competitive bidding became a farce under the aegis of the Blue Eagle, since all bids were the same. The board charged the practice nurtured monopoly and squeezed the small business man.

The Grand Coulee consignment will be the largest purchase on record of steel sheet piling. This is the biggest Government plum ever plucked by the Inland company. Others figuring in the lottery were Jones & Laughlin, Bethlehem, Illinois and Carnegie Steel companies.

Representatives of each of the firms and a galaxy of curious officials were present when Col. Fry dipped his hand into the hat and named the winner. The strange ceremony took place without advance ballyhoo and no reporters were invited.

U. S. Will Pay Freight.

By prearranged agreement, the Government will pay freight rates from the Buffalo, N. Y., basing point, although the Inland plant is near Chicago. Several railroads will share in the proceeds of the huge shipment, to be completed in 100 days.

Fifteen million dollars already has been appropriated for the Grand Coulee project by the PWA. A $29,339,301.90 general contract for the first unit is held jointly by the Silas Mason Co., the Walsh Construction Co. and Atkinson-Kier Co.

Wilson's Heirs Divide Million

All but $1,000 of Estate Goes to Relatives of Utility Magnate.

All except $1,000 of the $1,000,000 estate of Harley Peyton Wilson, utility magnate of Hollin Hall, Fairfax County, Va., who died on November 29, has been left to members of his family. His will was offered for probate yesterday.

There were two codicils to the will, the first naming Louis C. Barley, of Alexandria, as executir and trustee, an dthe second naming Miss Margaret Deike, of Hollin Hall, his sister-in-law, as coexecutir with Mr. Barley.

The estate is divided into five parts, four of nine-fortieths each and one of one-tenth. Mrs. Mary C. Hughes, of Hollin Hall, a sister-in-law, is bequeathed one-tenth of the estate; Mrs. Alice I. Jenkins and her daughter, Mrs. Wesley White, both of Seattle, Wash., are bequeathed jointly nine-fortieths; another nine-fortieths to his son, Holt T. Wilson, of New York City; nine-fortieths to his daughter, Miss Alice A. Wilson, of New York City, and nine-fortieths to his sister-in-law, Miss Margaret Deike, of Hollin Hall.

The various bequests are left in trust, but with the proviso that this will not hinder the beneficiaries from disposing o ftheir holdings as they see fit.

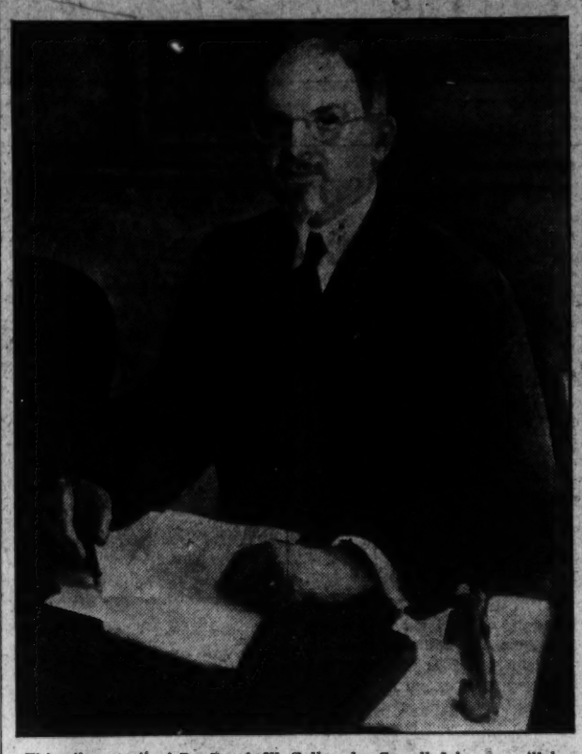
Portrait of Dr. Ballou for School



This oil portrait of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, by Sewell Johnson, will be presented to Roosevelt High School at the art assembly Monday morning. Miss May P. Bradshaw, assistant principal, will preside at the assembly and the speech of acceptance will be made by Allan Davis, principal.

School to Hang PWA Paintings

Portrait of Dr. Ballou and Three Murals Given Roosevelt High.

Roosevelt High School will make formal acknowledgement of three murals and a portrait of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, at a ceremony to be held at 10 a. m. Monday in the school auditorium. The work was provided by PWA funds. Members of the Board of Education, the artists, and school officials will participate in the ceremonies.

May P. Bradshaw, assistant principal, will preside and introduce the artists, Miss Sewell Johnson, Charles Darby, Nelson Rosenberg and Calvin Prince. Allan Davis, principal, will voice the appreciation of the school.

Miss Johnson's portrait of Dr. Ballou will be placed on exhibit for the first time since its completion.

The mural decorations consist of "Frontiers in American Literature," painted by Miss Johnson for the English classroom on the first floor and depicting the development from Hawthorne to Sinclair Lewis; "Variations on the Columbine and Pierrot Theme," by Mr. Darby, decorating the theater lobby; and "The American Panorama," by Mr. Rosenberg, covering two wall spaces in the cafeteria. Mr. Rosenberg also executed a fresco panel entitled "Euclid" in the passageway between the main buildings.

Mother Accused Of Slaying Three

Little Rock, Ark., Nov. 30 (AP).—A first degree murder charge was placed against Mrs. Charles Jenkins today in connection with the deaths by poison of her three children here last Saturday.

Coroner L. C. Aday caused the charge to be placed against her after he said she said she had purchased a quantity of poison. Aday quoted her as saying she intended to use it to kill herself.

Capsules, which her husband believed contained a cold remedy, were given to the children, Sybil, 10; Alta Fern, 7, and Obelee, 6, by Jenkins last Friday night. He took one of the capsules himself, and all four were seized with convulsions, the children dying a few hours afterward. Jenkins recovered.

Hurley and Foe In War Conflict Meet Once Again

Fort Worth, Tex., Nov. 30 (AP).—Patrick Hurley, former Secretary of War, and M. Struver, an attache in the German Embassy in Washington, met one day in a German trench during the war.

Both were wounded in a hand-to-hand conflict.

They met again today—on a plane from the Pacific Coast—and breakfasted together at the municipal airport.

Hurley was en route from Los Angeles to Tulsa. Struver and Dr. Hans Luther, German Ambassador, boarded the plane at Phoenix, and were en route to Cincinnati.

Hurley, it seems, had been a member of a raiding party that invaded a German trench. There was a stiff combat, during which Struver was wounded. He, in turn, threw a hand grenade which wounded Hurley.

Japan Proposes New Naval Treaty

the other Japanese delegate, and Admiral Ernle Chatfield, of the British Admiralty, neither presented any new proposals, discussing instead the technical side of the situation to an extent which apparently was satisfactory to both and, it seemed, left the door open to an ultimate agreement.

The two reviewed the conversations from the time the British recently suggested their compromise plan, reexamining each move.

The United States delegates, Davis and Admiral William H. Standley, planned to have lunch and play golf tomorrow with Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary and member of the British delegation, from whom they hoped to get new light on the increasingly complex situation.

U. S. Seeks Action On Reich Arrests

Man and Woman Held as Spy Suspects.

Renewed efforts to speed up the disposition of charges against two Americans held in German prisons will be made in Berlin today by Consul General Douglas Jenkins, according to the Associated Press.

Jenkins notified the State Department yesterday he had arranged a conference with Undersecretary of Justice Freisler, at which he expects a report on the cases involving Isabel Lillian Steele, of Hollywood, Calif., and Richard Roiderer, formerly of Chicago.

Miss Steele has been held in prison for more than three months and Roiderer more than six months without formal charges against them or any official explanation by the German government. News dispatches from Berlin said they were arrested on "suspicion of espionage."

Noted French Aviatrix Is Killed Testing Plane

Versailles, France, Nov. 30 (AP).—Mlle. Helen Boucher, 26, who held one women's airplane altitude record and claimed the women's speed record, was killed today in a crash. She was making a test flight at Guyancourt airfield.

On August 8 Mlle. Boucher flew her plane at 276 miles an hour, 27 miles an hour faster than the previous international women's record held by Mrs. May Haizlip. In 1933 Mlle. Boucher set a second category altitude record of 19,356 feet.

Five Identified, Death Mystery Motive Sought

Californian, Father of 3 Girls, Traced Through Marine Corps.

Carlisle, Pa., Nov. 30 (AP).—With a grandmother's identification of the three little girls found dead on a nearby mountainside, authorities tonight neared solution of the mystery surrounding the deaths of five persons in Pennsylvania's "babes in the woods" case.

Although the motive for the slaying of the girls and a man and a woman found shot to death at Duncansville still remained to be cleared up, along with other loose ends in the case, investigators were reasonably certian they knew who the five were.

The first break came with the identification of the man found at Duncansville. This was made through the United States Marines, who reported his fingerprints tallied with those of Elmo J. Noakes, of Roseville, Calif.

Identification of Girls.

Identification of the three little girls was made by Mrs. E. J. Taylor, who saw photographs of them and said she was positive they were the there daughters of Noake's wife, now dead. Noakes was the father of two, she said, but the oldest, Norma, was a stepdaughter, born to his wife in a previous marriage.

As these facts came to light, authorities became further convinced that the fifth victim, the woman whose body was found with Noakes in a railroad shack at Duncansville, was his niece, Winifred Pierce.

At the same time R. U. Noakes, a brother of Noakes at Roseville, said his niece and the three children left their home early this month.

"There has been trouble in the family for several years," he said, "and I guess that's why Elmo left home."

While authorities still worked on the theory that the five deaths constituted a family tragedy—one of murder and suicide—R. U. Noakes insisted he doubted that Elmo killed the children.

Burial Planned Today.

At Sacramento, Calif., Noakes said he was arranging to come East, and wished the funeral of the children would be delayed until he arrived. However, authorities decided to bury the three little bodies tomorrow.

Meanwhile, Coroner E. A. Haegele announced the official cause of the children's death as "suffocation by external means." He declined to amplify his statement, issued after a conference with a Harrisburg pathologist.

Couple, in Court, Confess Attempt To Extort $10,000

Detroit, Nov. 30 (AP).—George A. Carpenter, 34, and his 29-year-old wife, Bernice, pleaded guilty tonight when they were arraigned before United States Commissioner J. Stanley Hurd on a charge of attempting to extort $10,000 from Daniel Sorenson, wealthy Toronto manufacturer and Carpenter's uncle, under threats of kidnaping his young son and daughter.

The commissioner referred the case to the Federal grand jury and sent the Carpenters to the psychopathic ward of Receiving Hospital under $2,500 bond each.

They were arrested Wednesday by Detroit police, after a dummy package had been delivered at the hotel where they live, in accordance with instructions contained in a letter Sorenson received on November 24.

Inspector John Hoffman, of the Detroit police, asserted that Carpenter admitted dictating the letter to his wife, warning Sorenson that unless $10,000 were turned over within 24 hours a "big automobile with four men" would take his children.

New Gas Develops Increase in Power

Gives Quicker Start, Warm Faster Is Claim.

A new refinery process makes possible a gasoline, known as Aerotype Esso, and embodying the desirable features of aviation gasoline, will be put on sale today at Esso stations from Maine to Louisiana, according to I. F. Gutting, local manager of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

"In the development of this new fuel our pattern was Fighting Grade Aviation gasoline with its slow starting features removed," Gutting said yesterday. "Because it contains a scientifically balanced proportion of each of three major constituents of gasoline—the light, intermediate and heavy ends—it has many distinctive features. In tests it gave 20 per cent more power than the best premium fuel on the market to date, started cars 54 per cent more rapidly and warmed up 11 per cent more quickly."

The gasoline is marketed under a guarantee by which any one dissatisfied with its performance may obtain a refund of the difference between the new fuel and the regular Esso.

Arms Race Means War, Says Woman's Peace He

Miss Mary Moss Wellborn, of Starkville, iMss., leader of the "flying squadron" of the Women's International League for Peace, arrived in Washington yesterday after a three-months' trip through the Western States in which she visited thirty cities in nineteen States in the interest of the Senate investigation of the munitions industry. Disarmament is becoming a political issue, according to Miss Wellborn. In the face of an overwhelming peace sentiment throughout the country, Miss Wellborn said, "I believe it will be impossible for our Government to continue its policy of taking a leading part in the world armament race which inevitably leads to war."

Priest's Slayer Enters Pleas Of Not Guilty

Prosecution Plans Attack on Unwritten-Law Defense.

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—Joseph Steinmetz, Jewish rabbi's son who turned Protestant divinity student, thumbed through a Bible today as his counsel entered pleas of not guilty to charges that he murdered his bride and the Rev. Joseph J. Leonard in a hotel room Monday.

The curly-haired 22-year-old defendant did not even appear to be listening to the proceedings in general sessions court, which included a spirited argument between Judge George L. Donnellan and Samuel S. Leibowitz.

Judge Donnellan interrupted Leibowitz as the attorney moved to enter not guilty pleas to two indictments charging murder in the first degree and a third for illegal firearms possession.

Clash With Attorney.

"This retainer business must have happened in the last ten minutes," the judge said. "I'll not have any attorney coming in here and imposing himself on a poor defendant just to get newspaper publicity.

"Mr. Leibowitz informed me ten minutes ago that the defendant possesses no means and asked me to assign him as counsel. He suggested that if I appointed him he would allow the $1,000 counsel fee to be used to employ alienists.

"Your honor, I never said anything of the sort," the attorney protested.

Assurance from the defendant that Leibowitz was retained ended the dispute.

Prosecution's Plan.

Leibowitz said he would contend the youth was ignorant of "the nature and quality" of his action in shooting his wife and the priest in the latter's room at the Knights of Columbus Hotel, following a drinking party.

Assistant District Attorney Saul Price countered with the announcement he would have the police ask Hollywood authorities for a copy of a letter which Samuel Armstrong, the girl's father, said he had received from his daughter.

This letter, Armstrong said, "would break down any unwritten law defense."

Scientists Nearing Fatal Tropic 'Eden'

Los Angeles, Nov. 30 (AP).—An exploration cruiser carrying a scientific expedition will pull into lonely Marchena Island within a few days in hopes of solving a riddle of death of two men from thirst.

The puzzle involves the deaths of two men believed to be Arthur Estampa and Alfred Rudolph Lorenz, colonists of the Galapagos Islands, and how they came to be on the uninhabited isle.

While detective work will be the first task, neither the Velero III nor the expedition was designed for such investigations. The Smithsonian expedition includes a corps of scientists ranging from ornithologists to icthyologists. When it sailed from here November 23, the expedition expected to reach this island by next Monday.

Am I Baby Blue? That's Big Issue Of New Congress

Pity them who assign offices to Representatives. Their lot is hard, the Associated Press says.

Most of the legislators want to get into the new House Office Building, with its baby blue leather chairs and fancy washrooms. They frown on the old House Office Building. But there aren't enough of the new offices to go around.

The House Building Commission, which assigns offices, is without a chairman since Speaker Henry T. Rainey died. The Speaker always heads the commission.

Representatives Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, and Bacharach (Republican), New Jersey, are the remaining members. Bacharach told Bankhead that while he is being "pestered" by requests for choice assignments, he is not going to assume the responsibility. He suggested an earlier caucus of the Democrats to select a Speaker.

New Writers Favored As Models of English

National Council of Teachers Now in Conference Here Protest Against Standards 50 Years Old.

Modern writers will become the standards for teaching English in the Nation's schools and colleges rather than dead authors whose works have been accepted as classic, if some of the educators attending the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the National Council of Teachers of English here have their way.

An undercurrent of protest against teaching methods based on literature centuries old and grammatic standards in vogue 50 or more years ago ran through sessions of the council which brought nearly 1,000 English teachers from all sections of the country to the Mayflower yesterday for discussions of the profession's technique.

The leading challenge to present-day teaching methods came from the council's committee on college reading in a report prepared by Dr. Atwood H. Townsend, of New York University, who held that the average English professor is "a generation or two" behind his students.

The committee recommended a "greater recognition of modern literature," more college courses in American and continental literature with "decreasing emphasis on British literature," and a "lessening of the present emphasis on authors of little interest to modern undergraduates, especially Chaucer, Spenser and the Victorian essayists."

The committee also produced statistics based on a study of readng preferences as expressed by 54 college heads and 1,638 students showing that 50 years separates the literature read by professors and authors in favor in the classrooms.

At the top of the professorial list of books recommended for college student reading was "Pride and Prejudice." "The Return of the Native," "The Scarlet Letter," "Henry Esmond" and "Vanity Fair" were next in that order.

Students Prefer Moderns.

Students said they would rather read "The Forsyte Saga," "The Good Earth," "Arrowsmith," "The Return of the Native," and "Of Human Bondage." The average publication date of the professors' list, the report said, was 1840, of the students' 1890. Twenty-five of the books on the students' list were published between 1930 and 1934, 49 in the last ten years, whereas only six on the college list bore publication dates later than 1924.

"Students prefer the livelier stuff, while the professors apparently felt that they should recommend the more solid, moral stuff," Dr. Townsend said, by way of explanation. "The professors approve the things they read and liked when they went to school. To the students most of these are dead, deal with dead controversies. The students still read Shakespeare, however."

In the same trend, Willard W. Beatty, president of the Progressive Education Association and superintendent of the Bronxville (N. Y.) schools, told a general session of the council:

"With all due respect for Burke's famous speech, I have the greatest sympathy with children whose chief reaction is that the affair of the colonies is a dead issue."

Dictionaries Behind Times.

Dictionaries and grammar textbooks drew a crossfire of criticism as authorities for proper speech. They are always changing, and are always behind the times, Alffred S. Dashiell, editor of Scribner's Magazine, told one session of the council. "Textbooks are cluttered up with requirements which are no longer observed in the current speech and writing of educated men and women," he declared.

"The secret of good punctuation, good usage, good speech and good writing is to make the meaning clear, to express thought and feeling. Some of the best writing today appears in the newspapers and magazines, some of the worst in the treatises of scholars."

Speech practices which the last generation would never have permitted in good society are today accepted as good English usage, Albert H. Marckwardt, of the University of Michigan, told the session on current lankuage problems.

He spoke for "linguistic liberalism" and said that language standards in the schools have remained unchanged for generations principally because the works of modern language researchers are either not easily understood by teachers or not available to them.

In the same session Harold B. Allen, also of the University of Michigan, accused teachers of "tacitly" denying "the findings of modern linguistic science."

DDegree for Originality.

A proposal that a college degree be offered for original literary work was thrown into the council by the Rev. Francis P. Donnelly, S. J., professor of rhetoric at Fordham University, during an address at the organization's annual banquet last night.

"The only degrees given today for literature as an art are those distinctions dubiously styled honorary," he said. "To treat literature as a science or as a history, to divide into periods and to classify under tags, such practices furnish slight incentive to the student. Composition has been a potent stimulus in the past, suprring students on to rival authors."

Modern trends toward character education and integration of teaching were questioned Dr. J. M. O'Neill, of the University of Michigan, and Dr. Allan Abbott, of Teachers College, Columbia University, Dr. Abbott spoke at the banquet. He said:

"If my sense of literary values is to be determined by some "frame of reference" outside literature, it must be such as to justify my going one week to a celebration in honor of the 1,000th anniversary of Ferdausi, and the following week to a lecture by Gertrude Stein—and I do not find this justification in the social studies; so far as I can see, neither Ferdausi nor Miss Stein contributes significantly to the new economic order."

The banquet session also heard Dr. Marjorie Nicholson, a dean of Smith College, and Thomas W. Gosling, director of the Junior Red Cross.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace will be the principal speaker at a final general session of the council at 1 p. m. today.

Mystery Sedan Sought in Hunt For Nelson Aid

Slaying of Baby Face Called Justifiable Homicide at Inquest.

Chicago, Nov. 30 (AP).—Police seeking Alvin Karpis, reputed henchman of George (Baby Face) Nelson and a candidate for designation as Public Enemy No. 1, late today searched North Shore suburbs for a mystery automobile reported carrying two men and a woman, all armed.

The black sedan was first sighted in Niles Center, where the bullet-studded body of Nelson was found Wednesday.

The unidentified man and woman who accompanied the diminutive gangster when he engaged in a deadly gun duel Tuesday with two Federal agents are believed to have deposited the body in the Niles Center field.

Woman Holds Weapons.

Detectives said they have no inkling as to the identity of the men and woman in the automobile they sought today. They said one of the men and the woman sat in the rear seat, holding a machine gun and a pistol, and that the car bore New York license plates.

Whether Karpis or John Hamilton, like the late Nelson a Dillinger mob "trigger man," was in the car police professed themselves unable to say. Likewise they would not comment on the possibility the woman might be Nelson's widow, Mrs. Helen Gillis.

The slaying of Nelson was written into the books as a justifiable homicide today.

The same inquest disclosed that the terrorist's practical wife had several months ago picked out the undertaker she wanted to lay out the body of her gangster husband when he met the inevitable—death at the hands of the law he defied.

Hundreds See Body.

The jurors decided Nelson died of wounds in the abdomen inflicted by either or both Government agents, Samuel P. Cowley and Herman E. Hollis.

Hundreds of persons passed through the morgue to see the body of Nelson as it lay on the same slab which four months ago had held the body of John Dillinger.

The jury concluded that "Lester Gillis, alias 'Baby Face' Nelson," came to his death in battle with Cowley and Hollis, "who died in the tradition of always getting their man." It expressed regret at the death of the Federal men and instructed the coroner to write a letter of sympathy to their widows.

Take Outlaws Alive, Two Lawyers Urge

Chicago, Nov. 30 (AP).—Better capture and convict a public enemy than shoot him down, said two attorneys today, interviewed as the criminal section of the Illinois State Bar Association convened.

Guy McGaughey, chairman of the section of criminal law, termed it a dangerous practice to kill outlaws, but made exception "in extreme cases."

"A police officer should seek the ends of justice rather than the end of the criminal," said McGaughey.

"It is better to convict such men as John Dillinger, 'Pretty Boy' Floyd and 'Baby Face' Nelson, than it is to kill them. It has a more corrective effect on the criminal element."

William Scott Stewart, a criminal lawyer, contended that Federal officers are usurping the functions of local police and asserted that Attorney General Homer Cummings was "meddling with affairs outside of his province." The attorney said, in his opinion, the killing of John Dillinger was unnecessary and his arrest, trial and conviction would have been better for law and order. Dillinger, he said, permitted his arrest without resistance in Arizona.

Mussolini to Lower Military Duty Term

Rome, Nov. 30 (U.P.).—Premier Benito Mussolini is planning a reduction in compulsory military service to 12 months from the 18 at present, effective in January, it was learned tonight.

The reduction, to effect certain limited branches of the army, will be extended to all armed forces later. Il Duce was said to feel that preparedness for Italy as organized at present does not require a long term of service.

Senate Seeks Source of Arms Criminals Use

Deadly Submachine Gun to Be Chief Subject of Inquiry Next Week.

(Associated Press.)

Aroused at recent gang slayings of Federal agents, investigators for the Senate munitions committee determined yesterday to question arms makers here next week on how public enemies obtain their deadly weapons.

Representatives of the Colt, Winchester, Remington and du Pont manufacturing companies have been called as witnesses before the committee next Tuesday at the resumption of the hearings that began in September.

None of these companies manufactures the deadly submachine gun in popular use by criminals, but the committee hopes to gain from the long list of witnesses under subpena some inkling as to how outlaws have been securing their supply of guns, ammunition and tear gas. Stephen Raushenbush, committee investigator, estimated that at least 800 submachine guns are in the hands of the lawless.

Previous testimony was that many machine guns were hijacked from peace officials, but Senator Pope (Democrat), of Idaho, yesterday said he was not satisfied with this explanation and would seek to get further information, and an effective way to stop the criminal traffic in these arms.

Investigators yesterday revealed discovery of a sharp increase in the manufacture of cheap machine guns and submachine guns. Some were believed to be put together in Brooklyn, where skeleton manufacturing agencies assemble the guns, which are manufactured piecemeal in small machine shops.

One informant said yesterday that evidence pointed to sale of machine guns to a corrupt foreign official, who in turn sold these guns to criminals who smuggled them from their containers before shipment, or had them sent back into the country through criminal channels.

Mrs. Vanderbilt's Appeal Is Delayed

Court Reserves Decision on Her Application.

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt's fight to force Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew either to sustain or deny her habeas corpus petition for the custody of her daughter officially came today before the appellate division, with decision reserved.

The court was not expected to act on Mrs. Vanderbilt's application until next Monday, the court's first consultation day.

This first technical step in the preparation of an appeal was taken with all the secrecy which has marked hearing of the celebrated case. None of the papers submitted was made public. None of the principals was in court.

Strike Develops 3 Textile Boards

U. S. Economist to Study Industrial Conditions.

Three boards to investigate how much work should be required of textile employes were appointed yesterday by the Textile Labor Relations Board.

William A. Mitchell, a Farm Administration economist, was named as chairman of each of the agencies, which will study cotton, silk and wool conditions. He will receive $7,000 a year.

The boards resulted from the recent Nation-wide strike in the industry. An outstanding issue in the conflict was the so-called stretch-out, a system of requiring employes to man an unusually large number of machines.

'Shooting Spree' Ends In 4 Killed, 3 Wounded

Quitman, Miss., Nov. 30 (AP).—Floyd Watson, 21, colored, went on a "shooting spree" near here today, according to officers, killing four colored persons and wounding three others.

Angered over paternal objections to his going with Sanders Moss' 16-year-old daughter, Watson killed the entire Moss family, including his sweetheart, then fled into the woods, officers reported.

Steiwer Flays, Snell Defends Fletcher's Rule

Oregonian Asks Resignation, Minority Leader Says Job Well Done.

By Robert C. Albright.

Reorganization of the G. O. P. along liberal or reactionary lines teetered in the balance yesterday as Western and Eastern Republicans again clashed on the question of party leadership.

Returning Senate and House members freely expressed their opinions on party policy, with Chairman Henry Fletcher, of the Republican National Committee, the alternate target for bouquets and brickbats.

"I think it would be a very happy thing if Mr. Fletcher would resign," Senator Frederick Steiwer, Oregon Republican, told newspaper men. "I say that with the highest respect for Mr. Fletcher."

Snell Defends Fletcher.

A few minutes late, Representative Bertrand H. Snell, of New York, minority leader of the House, rallied to the defense of the Republican chieftain.

"I believe Chairman Fletcher did everything any man could do in the last campaign," he declared. "He fought a game fight in the face of billions spent by the Democrats to win the election."

Urging a policy of "affirmation," Senator Steiwer represented the Western Democrats as looking on the G. O. P. Eastern campaigners as spending too much time criticizing the Administration, when they might have offered something constructive.

Must Protect Workers.

He said the Republican party should address its policies "to the 17,000,000 of unemployed," and when it does that the party will come back.

The Oregon colleague of Senate Republican Leader Charles L. McNary authorized a statement espousing lower interest rates for farmers, universal draft of materials as well as men in time of war, and old-age pensions, adding:

"We must deal fairly with reality and recognize that science and invention have machined so many laborers out of their jobs that Government can no longer remain indifferent to the situation."

He said he could hardly imagine Chairman Fletcher in accord with such views.

Snell conferred yesterday with a number of House Republicans, including Representative Allen T. Treadway, ranking minority member of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Will Back Roosevelt.

Following conferences, he announced the Republican House leadership will "go along all the way with President Roosevelt on all measures honestly calculated to help business to get back on its feet."

"What optimism is prevailing today can be directly traced to what little encouragement the Administration recently has given to private industry," he said. "It was in vain I urged such a policy last session.

"If it continues to be reflected in new legislation put before Congress, we will go along. I have no intention of fighting the Administration. It is my idea that we judge every bill as it comes up here upon its merits."

Scoffs at Short Session.

He said the Administration can do much to stimulate recovery by definitely stating whether it intends to encourage private business or take over all industry.

Snell scoffed at Democratic predictions of a short session.

"That is what they always tell us," he said. "If I were guessing, it would be the other way."

In his discussion of Republican leadership, Steiwer said he was not "suggesting" that Fletcher retire.

"I merely said it would be a happy thing," he added quickly.

Dictatorship Seen In Alfonso Parley

quently mentioned in monarchical circles in connection with possible dictatorship is that of Jose Maria Gil Robles, young Catholic leader.

Though Gil Robles has avowed his Republican sympathies, monarchists here feel the gap between his church instincts and any aversion he might feel toward return of the "most Catholic" reigning family could be bridged in the event he came to be dictator.

The efforts of Young Jose Primo de Rivera, son of the late dictator under Alfonso, to spread Fascism in Spain are also regarded sympathetically in monarchist circles.

At the opposite extreme is the reaction to the "menace" of dictatorship voiced in the so-called intellectual circles of the colony—the Socialists, left Republicans, central Republicans, the students, artists, and some newspapermen. They insist any effort at dictatorship would bring "real revolution" of the people. They point to the recent bloody extremist revolt as evidence that the "masses of the people" are against the rightist government of Premier Alejandro Lerroux.

Steiwer Urges Bonus Payment In Yearly Sums

Harrison's Proposals Draw Fire of Snell and V. F. W. Leaders.

A new "compromise" on the bonus issue, favoring payment of adusted service certificates in yearly installments, was put forward yesterday as the veterans blasted away at proposals to pay only needy former soldiers.

The installment plan was offered by Senator Steiwer (Republican), Oregon, who called it a "business-like" method that would be generally favored by business men. He would start payments immediately.

His plan was suggested after the bonus-relief proposals of Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, drew the fire of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and House Republican Leader, Bertrand H. Snell.

Snell said the Treasury might as well pay the bonus in full as to pay all those who claim need of relief. V. F. W. officials said they saw no reason why a veteran should be "destitute" before he collects on the bonus contract.

Steiwer told reporters he would vote for full payment if his plan is rejected, but he is of the opinion that no cash payment bill can pass the Senate over a Presidential veto.

He said veterans are in more need now than they would be in 1945 when the certificates are due, as indicated by the high percentage of bonus borrowing. He said no relief compromises would satisfy the veterans.

Life Penalty Seen For All Kidnapers In Court Decision

Denver, Nov. 30 (AP).—The kidnaper lost another round today in his battle with the law.

The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals flung a clear-cut warning to gangland that all kidnaping may be made punishable by life imprisonment. It sharpened the teeth of the "Lindbergh" law with a decision that meant gangster Harvey Bailey must spend the remainder of his life behind the fortress-like walls of Alcatraz Prison.

Constitutionality of the law, the Government's strongest weapon against kidnaping, was upheld in one brief sentence: "to prohibit the use of the channels of interstate commerce to facilitate the crime of kidnaping is clearly within the power of Congress."

The decision marked the first time an appelate court has passed upon the law's constitutionality. It killed the hope of Bailey, member of the George (Machine Gun) Kelly gang, to escape his life sentence for the $200,000 kidnaping of Charles F. Urschel, millionaire Oklahoma oil man.

Brown Attacks Parole System of Women's Clubs; Chief Justice Alfred Wheat of the District Supreme Court; Judge Gus A. Schuldt, presiding judge of the District Police Court; Judge Fay A. Bentley of the District Juvenile Court; Leslie C. Garnett, United States district attorney; Leo A. Rover, former United States district attorney; Judge John A. Wood of the Federal Parole Board; James G. Yaden, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations; the chairman of the committee of 40 of the District Bar Association; Bishop James A. Freeman, the Rev. John O'Grady, head of the Catholic Charities; George Beasley, president of the District Federation of Civic Associations, and the head of the colored Y. M. C. A.

Others May Be Added.

Other names may be added to the list of invited witnesses. The list compiled at the meeting was largely an impromptu one. But the idea of throwing the hearings wide open to anyone who had the urge to express themselves was vetoed by Commissioner Allen for the time being.

"We don't want to shut off anybody who might have some thought or information for the benefit of the committee," the Commissioner said. "But I believe the committee should first proceed to get the views of those persons whose views we would most like to have."

The figures presented by Maj. Brown were somewhat deflated by Mr. La Roe, who asked the police head whether the released prisoners still were free, whether their law violations had been serious or minor infractions, whether the prisoners had been paroled by the parole board or released automatically under the law and whether the police ever had complained about any one of them to the parole board.

Brown's Answer.

Maj. Brown said he could answer those questions.

"It will take me less than ten minutes to sign a warrant for any paroled prisoner against whom the police have grounds for complaint," Mr. La Roe said.

"Have the police complained to the board about the release of these prisoners?" asked Commissioner Allen.

"Our records do not show the full facts," Maj. Brown said. "We have no way of knowing just what is going on."

"Well," said Commissioner Allen, "it seems to me that the very first thing to do is to work out some plan whereby the Police Department and the Parole Board get together on information."

It was agreed some plan of coordination should be developed immediately.

Questions Proposed.

Mr. La Roe proposed a list of questions that should be asked of witnesses who are invited to future hearings. First on the list was the question of whether a parole system, properly administered, is desirable.

Other questions suggested were these:

Is a parole law adequate which makes all prisoners eligible for parole at the end of one-fifth of the maximum sentence?

Do you favor public parole hearings, similar to court proceedings, and the opening to public inspection of the records of the Parole Board?

Should publicity be given to those eligible for parole, the names of those granted parole, the names of those denied parole, the names of those sponsoring the parole of a prisoner and the names of those opposing his parole?

Are the facilities of the Board of Parole adequate to enable it to carry out the purpose of the law?

Would it be desirable to pay the members of the board salaries?

Job Relief Plan Of Nine Billion Up to Roosevelt

nebulous stage. At this time they are said to represent nothing more than approaches to the problem of what the Federal Government should do to help the 8,000,000 or more unemployed in the Nation.

Decision Up to President.

The final decision rests with the President, who has his eye on the financial aspects of such ventures, as well as on the relief of distress. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau will be present at the weekend conference to point out what the Treasury can stand in the way of financing such projects. Moreover, the President may not make his decision public until he sends his budget to Congress in January.

Nevertheless, the boldness of the spending arm of the Government in suggesting appropriations running as high as $9,000,000,000 has disturbed such figures within the Administration as Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper and others who have advocated putting the brakes on spending in order to reassure private enterprise and stimulate its activities.

Wants Spending Reduced.

Scattered throughout the Administration are others who believe, as does Secretary Roper, that the best approach to the situation is a gradual decrease in Federal emergency expenditures. Despite the apparent reconciliation of Mr. Moffett to Secretary Ickes' ideas, the former remains opposed to Government activities in fields that belong to private enterprise.

In this preliminary maneuvering over future policies of the Administration, the Ickes-Hopkins group may be playing smart politics, from their viewpoint, some observers believed. By discussing proposed appropriations in astronomical figures, they may be deliberately paving the way for the President to refuse their demands, and to grant them only $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 for their work, instead of $9,000,000,000.

Even the smaller sums are much larger than many conservatives believe are necessary or desirable from the viewpoint of the situation and the condition of the Treasury. But once these conservative groups are frightened by the prospect of expenditures totaling $9,000,000,000, an appropriation of one-third of that sum might appear to them as an acceptable compromise.

It is possible that Secretary Ickes and Mr. Hopkins would be at their wits-end if Congress instructed them to spend $9,000,000,000 or even $5,000,000,000 in one year on PWA projects without throwing the money away. Expenditures so far this fiscal year on PWA projects, relief, civilian conservation and the like has been at an annual rate not in excess of $3,500,000,000.

In this connection it was recalled that last January President Roosevelt in his budget estimated that expenditures for the last fiscal year would total $10,596,000,000. This caused gasps of surprise on Capitol Hill, but the actual expenditures totaled only slightly less than $6,800,000,000.

Armstrong, Better, To Leave Hospital

Dr. Charles Armstrong, apparently recovered from a mysterious malady which defied diagnosis, will leave Naval Hospital today and return to his home at 1001 Otis street northeast.

A Public Health Service research surgeon, he was taken ill suddenly several weeks ago. For more than a year he has been conducting laboratory experiments in an effort to determine the cause of encephalitis epidemic, or sleeping sickness.

Dr. Armstrong will spend a convalescence period at his home before returning to duty at the National Institute of Health.

Ferguson Ranch Faces Seizure.

Dallas, Tex., Nov. 30 (AP).—Judge Robert B. Allen today awarded the Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank a personal judgment of approximately $50,000 against former Gov. James E. Ferguson and announced his intentions of entering a foreclosure order on a 626-acre ranch of Ferguson and his wife, Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson.

Housing Plans To Go Through, Moffett Says

Vast Home Project Will Be Directed by Ickes and Himself.

(Post Staff Writer.)

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 30.—Whatever doubt may have remained after last week's rift between Secretary Ickes, the hard-fisted administrator of public works, and James A. Moffett, Federal housing administrator, that the Roosevelt regime is planning a vast, Federally financed housing program was dispelled today. It disappeared when Mr. Moffett came down the corduroy, red clay road that leads to the Little White House on Pine Mountain and announced his complete concurrence in Administration plans.

The housing campaign, declared Mr. Moffett, is really divided into two entirely separate parts. In the one, which he manages, the Government is encouraging the private building and repairing of homes. In the other, which has Mr. Ickes for boss, the Government is engaged in slum clearance, subsistence homesteads and rural rehabilitation.

Between the two, Mr. Moffett professed to see no conflict, although last Thursday he was reported to have asserted that plans outlined by Mr. Ickes for the future "would knock the packing out of the existing real estate structure." Mr. Ickes had advocated Federal help for a small-home building program, on the grounds that private industry would not assume the initiative and "we can not sit and wait indefinitely."

That this is, generally speaking, the attitude of Mr. Roosevelt, who promptly composed the squabble in the Administration ranks by long distance telephone, is now common knowledge in Warm Springs. Hence, there was no surprise when Mr. Moffett returned apparently chastened from his interview, and gave every evidence of having been made to see the light.

"All Straight Now," He Says.

"That's all straightened out," was his only comment on the controversy.

An attempt to draw him out on his former difference of opinion, was spiked deftly by Marvin H. McIntyre, assistant White House secretary. When reporters asked Mr. Moffett if a Federally financed building program would not hurt private real estate values, Mr. McIntyre cut in abruptly on the interview.

"Let's not have any controversial questions," he interposed. "Let's just fire questions at him. Mr. Moffett will have to leave shortly."

Mr. Moffett came to a sudden stop in an explanation which he had just begun. He said no more on this subject, but he did find time to declare that reports from all parts of the country are encouraging, before he departed for Washington.

Mr. Moffett said that he talked over "the whole housing scheme of things" with the President. He explained that such activities as subsistence homesteading and slum clearance are distinctly outside the realm of private enterprise, and "it isn't the intention to compete with private enterprise in its natural field of operation."

"England has done this," he went on. "If the Government doesn't do it, no one else will."

Mr. Roosevelt later drove his little car to the grounds about Georgia Hall for pictures and his regular Friday press conference. Sitting in the machine, he told questioners that he has no plans for consolidating the large number of agencies which deal, in one way or another, with housing.

He likewise laughed away inquiries as to the forthcoming relief program, which is linked definitely with public works and housing. These plans are still in the study stage, he said, and anything that is said about them before his message to Congress on January 3 will be wrong.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Roosevelt, who has been staying here since the President began his visit almost two weeks ago, departed this morning for Washington. Mrs. Malvina Scheider, her secretary, and Miss Nancy Cook, a close friend, accompanied her back to the Capital.

Loneliness Impels Thanksgiving Day Suicide of Girl, 18

Denton, Tex., Nov. 30 (AP).—Loneliness appeared today as a motive for the Thanksgiving Day suicide by fire of Miss Helen Gardner.

Justice of the Peace Sidney Seagraves returned a verdict of suicide after he investigated the 18-year-old Wichita Falls girl's fatal burning at her rooming house. She was a junior at North Texas State Teachers College and a brilliant student.

Investigators concluded that she had locked herself in her bathroom and, lying down in the bathtub, covered her body with towels and newspapers soaked with rubbing alcohol.

A note she left told of loneliness. Most of the students had gone home for the holiday. Six letters also were found. One, addressed to her mother, was turned over to her and the others were destroyed, unread.

BETTY CARROLL SMITH.

Fight to Save Girl's Life Fails

Takoma Park Child Dies Despite Efforts of Rescue Squad.

Death defeated pluck and science in Takoma Park, Md., yesterday and claimed the life of Betty Carroll Smith, 18 months.

Betty died in her home at 303 Cedar avenue, despite desperate efforts of the Fire Rescue Squad to save her with oxygen tanks.

Eight days ago Betty became ill; her condition continually became worse, and her sickness was described as double pneumonia.

Thanksgiving night her parents had their doctor, and he knew the situation was critical. She had a fever of 105 degrees, and at 3 a. m. yesterday the doctor knew that she needed oxygen.

"Come at once," he told the firemen, who did not argue that the morning was wet and soggy, and that the child lay struggling for life out of their territory, in Maryland.

Under the oxygen tent, the child breathed more regularly. As the hours passed, however, she became weaker.

At 9:08 a. m. she died.

Edwards Denied Plea, Still Facing Death

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Nov. 30 (AP).—Robert Allan Edwards, under sentence of death for the "American Tragedy" slaying of his friend and neighbor, Freda McKechnie, was denied a new trial today.

His attorneys intimated they might appeal the ruling of the trial court to a higher court, but said a definite decision would not be made until they confer with Edwards.

Union College Head Defends Fraternities

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—Dr. Dixon Ryan Fox, president of Union College, defended the fraternity system today as an aid to college administration, but asserted that chapter houses were too costly, and that membership in chapters unwilling or unable to pay their debts was "demoralizing."

Maj. Williams' Rites Monday

Winner of Silver Star in Insurrection Died Here Yesterday.

Funeral services for Maj. Hugh Williams, U. S. A., retired, will be held in Arlington National Cemetery on Monday, it was stated at the War Department yesterday. Maj. Williams died yesterday afternoon at Walter Reed General Hospital.

Born in New Orlans, La., January 31, 1867, he served in the Second Louisiana Infantry in 1898 and 1899. He was appointed a second lieutenant in Company D of the Thirty-third U. S. Volunteer Infantry in the latter part of 1899. Later he went into the Officers Reserve Corps and then into active service.

Maj. Williams received the Silver Star decoration with the following citation: "For gallant action in the pursuit of superior forces of the enemy under the insurgent Gen. Tinio, in northern Luzon, P. I., December 4-18, 1899, through a most dangerous and difficult country, through hardships and exposure, thereby forcing the enemy to liberate 22 American prisoners held."

Maj. Williams is survived by his wife, Mrs. Lelia Williams, and a daughter, Miss Joan Williams, of 2110 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

314 Lots Sold To McGolrick At Arlington

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Cla. 500. Clarendon, Va.

One of Arlington County's largest real estate transactions during the year was consummated yesterday with the recording of a deed in the county clerk's office conveying the entire balance of the Clarenford subdivision of 314 building lots to J. E. McGolrick, of 200 West Thirty-fourth street, New York City.

Building operations for the first group of 100 houses to sell for less than $7,000 will be started Monday.

The property begins at the corner of Garrison and Glebe roads and extends into the wooded section opposite the Washington Lee High School. In the vicinity of this new development 35 homes have been erected this year. More than 95 per cent of them now are occupied.

Mr. McGolrick was especially attracted to this section by the availablity of mortgage money, he said. Also he was struck by the note of optimism here which is in decided contrast to the feeling around New York, he declared.

Prior to setting up a permanent organization here Mr. McGolrick will make his temporary headquarters with M. H. Barry, 200 Arlington Ridge, Aurora Hills, Arlington County.

Ashton C. Jones and M. H. Barry were co-brokers in this sale, while Mr. Golrick was represented by Wilson M. Farr, Commonwealth's attorney for Fairfax County.

Levy for Sewer Bonds.

According to a report released last night by County Manager Roy S. Braden in answer to a questionnaire submitted by the Arlington County Civic Federation, the original estimate setting the tax levy necessary to retire the $2,500,000 sewer bonds at 30 cents will probably be reduced to 25 cents.

"There also should be a reduction in the levy for maintenance and operation," Braden told the citizens' group. "This was originally estimated at 8 cents on the $100 assessed valuation, but because of the centralization of disposal plants the cost of the trunk line systems has been reduced."

Explaining the probable lower levy for the retirement of the bonds, Braden said: "It is now apparent that the trunk line system, as found necessary, and the disposal plant will be completed at a cost under the original estimate of approximately $240,000." The original plans provided for two disposal plants, one located at Rosslyn and the other at Four Mile Run. The Four Mile Run plant will be built.

"The amount necessary in trunk line cost has been reduced also in the face of higher unit cost than was originally estimated. These have been more than offset by reason of the fact that actual surveys since the sewer bond election have demonstrated the need for a far smaller number of miles than had been originally planned to serve the county. The original estimates, based upon the only maps and surveys available, together with a liberal safety margin, provided for a great deal more mileage of trunk lines than have been found necessary. The difference in mileage is absorbed by modification of the layout and by the inclusion of more of it in the lateral system, where it more properly belongs," he said.

Mr. Braden, in his report to the federation, said that about 560 men are now employed on sewer installation with more than 500 of them being residents of Arlington County. Contracts already awarded should increase this number to 1,000 by January, he said.

An investigation is now being made by a full-time employe of the county to determine if the workmen are really Arlington County residents or have registered under false addresses to get a job. A complete report is expected to be ready for the county board at its next meeting, Braden stated.

Construction of Jail.

The possibilities for the construction of an adequate jail with suitable quarters for the jailor, and remodeling of the courthouse developed yesterday, it was learned when Board Member William E. A. McShea requested Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas and County Manager Roy S. Braden to find whether Federal funds can be obtained to carry out the project.

It was pointed out by McShea that because of the rapid development of Arlington County additional room is needed at the courthouse to properly take care of the county's affairs. He further said that at present there is no room available at the courthouse for county board meetings except in the courtroom, and that can only be used when court is not in session. There also is needed adequate quarters for the county court.

The jail, admittedly long has been inadequate.

It is expected that a report on this matter will be submitted to the county board at its December meeting.

Served Throughout War.

At the opening of the war he enlisted in Company K of the Eighth Regiment of the Volunteers of Maryland and served throughout the war, although wounded once. He was a direct descendant of Col. Henry Baker, an aid to Gen. George Washington.

Always active in Democratic circles, he never missed voting at an election for 75 years until illness kept him from the polls last November. At one time he served as county supervisor of roads.

Jordan, Imirie Seek Recounts In Montgomery

Democrats Who Lost Recent Elections Join Others in Protest.

Two new aspirants for new counts yesterday further complicated the already bemuddled election situation in Montgomery County, Md.

Dr. Llewellyn Jordan, of Takoma Park, and John Imirie, of Bethesda, Democrats, who were defeated for places in the Maryland House of Delegates by Joseph C. Cantrel and Walter M. Magruder, Fusionists, formally announced their intention to ask a recount when the State Legislature meets in January.

The procedure for the House of Delegates recount is different from that of the others who have filed their petitions in the Montgomery County Circuit Court. The entire jurisdiction is with the House of Delegates, while in the other posts the circuit court takes jurisdiction.

Followed Three Others.

Dr. Jordan, who was defeated by 663 votes by Cantrel, said he would file his formal notice of contest with Cantrel yesterday, in accordance with procedure. Imirie, who trailed Magruder by 300 votes, said he would file his notice with Magruder today.

The two Democratic candidates announced that they decided to file for recount after the three other candidates who had lost the election filed in the circuit court.

They declared they believed it only fair to assume that the same irregularities charged by the other candidates apply to the votes cast in the House of Delegates race. They said they also had gathered a number of irregularities which had not been included in the petitions already filed.

Procedure Clearer.

The procedure for contest of a seat in the House of Delegates is much more clear-cut than that for the other places contested. The contesting candidates must first serve notice on their opponents of their intention to file for recount. A justice of the peace then is selected to take the testimony of the contestants, the contested candidates being permitted to examine the witnesses either themselves or through their attorneys.

The contest is then brought to the attention of the speaker of the House of Delegates, who refers the matter to the elections committee. The committee then reviews the testimony and decides whether a recount should be granted. If the committee decides to grant the recount, all ballot boxes are removed to Annapolis and the elections committee supervises the recount.

The other candidates who are involved in recount proceedings are John B. Diamond and Raleigh S. Chinn, who are contesting the election of Charles E. King and Frank H. Karn, Fusionists, to the board of county commissioners, and Walter W. Dawson, who is contesting election of James H. Pugh, Democrat, as State's attorney.

Straus is Attorney.

Pugh is expected to file his answer to the petition of Dawson today at the circuit court in Rockville. Demurrers have been filed in the Diamond-King and Chinn-Karn fights. Attorneys for both sides are expected to get together today and decide on the most suitable time, which is also convenient to Chief Judge Hammond Urner, for a hearing on the demurrers. Judge Urner is sitting with the court of appeals and his time is limited at present.

Judge Urner and Associate Judge Arthur D. Willard signed the rule to show cause in the Dawson-Pugh case, with today as the deadline for filing of the answer by Pugh.

Pugh was in Baltimore yesterday conferring with his attorney, Isaac Loeb Straus. Mr. Straus, former attorney general of Maryland, has been prominent in most election contests in the State in the past 30 years and is considered the outstanding Maryland authority on recounts.

Husband, 21, Asks Maryland Divorce

Henry Hough Says Bride Deserted Him Soon After Wedding.

Declaring his bride had deserted him just after they were married, Henry C. Hough yesterday filed a petition for absolute divorce from Mrs. Margaret M. L. Hough, also called Marjorie M. Loy, in Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville, Md.

Through Attorney John Oxley, the plaintiff told the court he and the defendant were married in Adamstown, Md., October 31, 1931, and that immediately after the marriage the wife returned to her parents.

The petition declares the plaintiff is 21 years old, but that the defendant is less than 21 years.

Arlington Entrance Bids Will Be Asked

PWA Funds to Be Used to Complete Construction.

The office of National Capital Parks will advertise Monday for bids to complete construction of the memorial entrance to Arlington National Cemetery.

Begun in 1932, the entrance was left uncompleted the following year when funds ran out. Work is being resumed under a public works allotment to the National Park Service.

Erection of two massive roadway gates and four pedestrian gates, all built of ornamental bronze and iron, and a 400-foot fence will be the principal items in the contract. The work will take three or four months, it is estimated.

$893,827 Used To Aid Schools

Auditor Reports Outlay During Past Year in Montgomery.

Disbursements of the Montgomery County (Md.) Board of Education during the past fiscal year totaled $893,827.38, according to the auditor's report filed this week by R. G. Rankin & Co. Receipts for the same period including a balance on hand of $21,295.84, amounted to $903,574.17.

The largest item of expenditure was for instructional service, which totaled $442,401.46, of which $406,847.82 represents teachers' salaries. Auxiliary agencies required disbursement of $60,388.60. Transportation of school pupils cost $52,932.58 during the year. Operation of the school plant cost $57,033.10, while $31,969.64 was spent on maintenance.

Capital outlay during the year was set at $285,863.43. Land and improvements required the expenditure of $159,436.72, while new buildings cost $105,817.45. Alterations of old buildings cost $13,844.48 and $6,764.80 was spent for equipment for old buildings. General control and administrative expenses amounted to $17,578.86.

The board received $683,500 of county funds, of which $390,000 was for current expenses and $293,500 for permanent improvements. The State provided $188,389.05. Receipts from other sources, including refunds, transportation of pupils, libraries, tuition and sale of abandoned schools, netted the board $10,389.28.

9 'Ayes' Added To Growing List Against 'Rider'

House Ways Head Favors Retaining 900, Post Poll Learns.

Nine more members of Congress yesterday added their ayes to the growing list in favor of repealing the McKellar "patronage rider" so that the 900 alcohol tax unit investigators may be retained.

Among those answering "yes" to The Post's questionnaire was Representative Robert L. Doughton, chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee. Mr. Doughton is a Democrat from North Carolina.

All replies received yesterday were in the affirmative, although Senator Lynn J. Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota, wrote in the words "or modification" above the "elimination of the McKellar rider."

The other members who joined in the demand for remedial action in the interest of the Treasury employes are:

Representative Allard H. Gasque (Democrat), of South Carolina.

Representative Murray Turpin (Republican), of Pennsylvania.

Representative Benjamin F. Koch (Republican), of Pennsylvania.

Representative Robert F. Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania.

Senator James J. Davis (Republican), of Pennsylvania.

Senator L. J. Dickinson (Republican), of Iowa.

Representative Otis Schuyler Bland (Democrat), of Virginia, had the following to say:

"It will be necessary for the rider to the appropriation bill to which you refer to be repealed by an act of Congress, and I prefer to reserve my decision until the matter shall have been fully considered."

Secretaries to Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York; Senator Millard Tydings, of Maryland, and Representative M. A. Romjue, of Missouri, reported that the members were not immediately available for comment.

900 Retain Posts Without Salaries

wrote to the Attorney General and asked two specific questions:

"1. Does the McKellar proviso require the Secretary of the Treasury to remove the class of employes included within its scope from the service, either by outright separation or by a partial dismissal in the form of a furlough?

"2. If your answer to the first question is in the negative, is the Secretary of the Treasury authorized by law to continue the employes in question in a duty status without pay?"

Positions Not Abolished.

To these questions the Attorney General replied:

The McKellar proviso "does not in express terms direct or require removal from the service of the employes included within its scope. Nor does it, in my opinion, do so by implication. The positions occupied by these employes and the salaries appertaining thereto were created and established under general statutes theretofore enacted by the Congress.

"The proviso does not purport to abolish these positions. On the contrary, its language clearly indicates that the Congress did not intend to abolish them.

"It provides only that after December 1, 1934, no part of the appropriation made under the act or theretofore made for the fiscal year 1935 shall be used to pay the salary of any employe falling within its provisions unless and until such employe shall have been appointed to the position occupied by him as a result of an open competitive examination thereafter to be held by the Civil Service Commission.

"In view of the foregoing, and since it appears that the employes involved had been appointed to their positions in the Treasury Department pursuant to the statutory authority at the time of the enactment of the proviso, it is clear that the proviso does not change or affect their status as employes in the Treasury Department, except with respect to the payment of their salaries.

Await Congress' Action.

"Since this is so, it is my opinion that the proviso does not require the Secretary of the Treasury to remove these employes from the service, either by outright separation or by a partial dismissal in the form of a furlough. For the same reasons, and as a necessary corollary, it is my further opinion that they may be continued in the service in a duty status without pay."

The telegram sent to all district supervisors subsequently by Guy T. Helvering, Internal Revenue Commisioner, read, in part, as follows:

"You are directed immediately to advise all employes affected by the so-called McKellar provision that their names will not be dropped from the rolls of the alcohol tax unit and that they may elect to remain in active duty status.

"Any such employes electing to remain in active duty status, however, should be advised that the department is without funds to pay their compensation for services rendered from and after December 1, and that the payment of compensation for services rendered from and after that date will be dependent upon such action as may be taken by Congress.

"It should be made clear to all employes affected by the McKellar provision that they are at liberty to apply for leave without pay from and after December 1 if, under the conditions stated, they do not desire to remain in active duty status."

Cardenas Gets Oath of Office In Mexico City

Colorful Crowd of 60,000 Hear President Pledge Aid to Workers.

Mexico City, Nov. 30 (AP).—To Gen. Lazaro Cardenas, 39-year-old veteran of 15 years' fighting in the field, Mexico today entrusted the task of carrying forward the development of the Mexican revolution.

Cardenas, the youngest man ever to become constitutional president of the republic, took the oath of office at noon while 60,000 persons, jamming the National Stadium to overflowing, looked on.

The new executive, swept into power in the overwhelming victory of the National Revolutionary Party at the last elections, was expected to follow in substance the policies of the man he succeeds, Abelardo Rodriguez, and the party which brought him to power.

A dark business suit was Cardenas' choice for the inaugural ceremony, in line with the party's emphasis on simplicity. The special ambassadors of 20 nations here for the ceremony consequently appeared in morning coats and silk hats instead of the customary more gaudy garb.

A colorful throng heard Cardenas, in his inaugural address, stress the party's obligations to the common people and emphasize the necessity of honesty in government.

Cardenas pledged his administration to strive for better economic and social conditions for the working classes.

Cardenas, to reach the stadium, drove through streets lined with troops. Thousands cheered him as he passed.

by the defendant to Owen Moore, in order to obtain a divorce."

As a result of his intervention, Hemmer alleged, Mary's mother subsequently was ousted from the vice presidency of United Artists Corporation through Fairbanks.

At another point the amended bill alleged that Hemmer interviewed Marilyn Miller at the request of Mary's mother and dissuaded her from breaking off her engagement to the late Jack Pickford at a time when Pickford's war record was receiving unfavorable mention. Later, Pickford, brother of Mary Pickford, married Miss Miller.

In addition to the purported domestic services rendered, Hemmer outlined alleged managerial services which, he contended, led to offers of $1,500,000 for Miss Pickford and the signing of remunerative contracts.

Hemmer filed the original suit in 1933, describing himself as Miss Pickford's guardian, foster father and business adviser between 1907 and 1920.

Miss Pickford has denied Hemmer's charges and refused to pay his claims.

Her attorney, Arthur F. Driscoll, argued in court today that the newest bill of particulars had failed to give sufficient details to enable the preparation of a defense.

Hemmer's attorney, Bernard H. Sandler, replied that all available details had been supplied concerning each allegation. He added he had filed the bill after stating in court it would contain scandalous matter, contending it was necessarily so because the defendant's attorney had told Judge William Bondy he wanted the bill filed.

France Wants Proof Hitler's Aim Is Peace

associated countries," Laval declared.

He invited Hitler, as proof of his desire for peace, to associate himself with this policy.

"Hitler has declared the present frontier of Germany sufficient," the minister said, "and, to justify his military policy, he has invoked the dignity of his country.

Hitler's Aid Arrives.

"How could he invoke such justification tomorrow if Germany, which no one menaces, refused to take her part in a collective organization of peace?"

Laval declared there was no territorial problem between France and Germany, saying "the question of the Saar should be solved in a normal manner satisfactory to both nations." He insisted that France had no other desire than to see a free vote in the Saar plebiscite January 13.

The foreign minister, insisting that France would accept the outcome of the plebiscite, reiterated that she stands ready to fulfill her obligations in the League of Nations to maintain order if called upon, but urged that other nations assume with France "the mission of police for eventual reestablishment of order."

By coincidence or otherwise, Von Ribbentrop reached the French capital on the very day Laval had chosen to explain the Flandin government's policies abroad to the deputies.

Von Ribbentrop, from the visitors' gallery, heard Lavla's words intended for the Reichsfuehrer.

Previously he had sounded out Deputies Jean Goy and Georges Scapini, who were blinded during the war, and other leaders of French veterans, on the possibility of direct negotiations between French and German veterans.

Idea Is Debated.

Goy and Henry Franklin Bouillon, who nearly had a duel recently over Goy's interview with Hitler, debated hotly the question of veterans of France and Germany seeking an understanding. Goy was booed by one section of the chamber for supporting the idea, while Bouillon, who declared "an understanding will never be possible with Hitlerite Germany," was applauded.

The Reichfuehrer's envoy tried to bring representatives of veterans together, and if he finds the collaboration possible, he is expected to return to Paris later with Rudolf Hess, Vice Fuehrer and Hitler's lieutenant, who would act as spokesman for the German veterans.

Hess last July appealed to French veterans for friendship toward Germany in an address he delivered in east Prussia.

Conversations looking toward the veterans' cooperation would be "unofficial," it was reported, with the likelihood that Von Ribbentrop and Hess also would talk informally with Laval and Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin.

It also was considered possible that Von Ribbentrop might confer with Laval during this visit.

The Transient Bureau.

After reading the matter-of-fact report on the Washington Transient Bureau in The Post of yesterday, one is left with the impression that its patrons are, on the whole, well cared for. One is also impressed with the very human reactions of the transients and those employed to aid them. The barber does not want to cut hair unless tipped; minor employes waste time wandering around; some transients express their "Americanism" by manfully demanding second helpings of food they do not want; others lose no opportunity to work any petty graft available.

This valuable report probably comes nearer to describing faithfully the problems of the Transient Bureau than would any number of official investigations. Written by a trained reporter with no ax to grind, it reveals the actual conditions. The facilities are inadequate; the arrangements could be improved; but the food is palatable and the administration, although sometimes hard-boiled, is endeavoring to do its difficult job both humanely and efficiently. There are agitators who would stir up trouble, for even among the drifters there are always politicians eager for personal aggrandizement. But when a communistic agitator sleeps until 8:30 in the morning his fellows dump him out of bed. Such treatment is far worse than jail for the reputation of an incipient commissar.

Just transients—but neither more nor less human than the rest of us. Victims of the depression, these men have little choice but to turn to the municipal agencies for warmth, bed and food. Naturally the bureaus are not palaces, nor their occupants paragons of virtue. Neither are they "creatures that once were men." It is good to find that the Washington Transient Bureau is not only conducted with real regard to the material needs of the men, but also that its efforts are generally appreciated by those whom circumstances force to turn to it for aid.

Russian Bread Prices.

Announcement that the Soviet Government has abolished the rationing system for bread and other basic foodstuffs means that there is enough food to satisfy the physical needs of the population, without taking precautionary measures to insure adequate amounts for each individual. Hereafter all bread is to be sold at a uniform price probably above that previously prevailing in the government stores. This increase in prices will be accompanied, it is announced, by a 10 per cent increase in wages to offset the higher living costs.

It is particularly interesting to note the difference between the Russian system of fixing prices and the methods that would be followed in countries where prices are determined by competition. In the latter case, a fall in prices would naturally result if supplies became more abundant. In Russia, however, prices are likely to be raised despite an increased supply of foodstuffs. The explanation of this superficial paradox is simple. In Russia prices are regarded as a means of regulating consumption, whereas in a competitive economy, they are fixed by market bids and offers that result in high prices for scarce products and vice versa.

In a country where the state is owner and manager of the means of production and distribution, it is obvious that prices have to be fixed with reference to factors that are not considered in a private economy. If there are inadequate supplies of materials, whether bread or coal or steel, they will have to be apportioned among the productive agencies with a view to carrying out the economic plans of the state. In the case of bread humanitarian considerations also enter. It follows that when bread is scarce prices may nevertheless remain low, so long as waste in consumption is avoided by rationing buyers. When conditions have improved sufficiently to enable each man to buy as much bread as he desires, protection against excessive consumption by some individuals may be afforded by raising prices.

Price-fixing, therefore, in the Soviet economy requires much more than a mere determination of how much can be sold at a given level of prices. Prices may be fixed with a view to producing large profits for Soviet industries in case of some goods, or to afford a maximum amount of consumer satisfaction with minimum profits or no profits in other cases. But under all circumstances, the system of price-fixing is designed to further a planned scheme of economy. The fairness or economic soundness of such prices can not be tested by the standards that prevail in countries living under the capitalistic system.

Economy And Recovery.

Representative Buchanan, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, hopes it will be possible to scale down the emergency budget in a modest way, if trade continues to improve and the relief burden permits. On the other hand, the Administration apparently intends to recommend a huge expansion of emergency spending on the theory that in this way heavy industry can be stimulated and the relief burden curtailed. This rather blunts the edge of Mr. Buchanan's economy hope.

Admittedly work relief necessitates much heavier outlays per man than direct benefits. Consequently, if the policy of substituting jobs for doles is to be carried out on a large scale, the extraordinary budget will show a rapidly mounting deficit. Then, too, the number of unemployed is seemingly greater now than it was a year ago, in spite of a rather active pump-priming policy to date. If, as the A. F. of L. asserts, there are "550,000 more out of work (in private industry) than we had at this time last year," there is slight prospect of any substantial reduction in the relief burden, even without a more profligate governmental spending program.

Under the circumstances the Administration has the obligation to demonstrate that its half-revealed plans are more constructive than chasing rainbows. The proper function of our Government in the present emergency is not to provide large-scale employment itself, nor even to try to induce a forced-draft recovery by hurling billions into the breach. The essential duty of the state is to encourage every natural tendency towards resumption of economic activity by removing, so far as possible, the impediments in the road. The Administration can not successfully take over the business car and drive it through the barriers. It can, however, put a lot more emphasis on the removal of those barriers.

Threats of Government competition designed to coerce business into expanding the scale of its operations can only create a psychological atmosphere unfavorable to private initiative. If the Government really wishes to create confidence in the future, without which business improvement is not to be expected, it must try to remove the causes of distrust, one of the chief reasons for which is anxiety over the state of the public finances.

Moreover, a vast outpouring of public funds within a short period of time is a direct invitation to wasteful and ineffective expenditure. Consequently, if the Government should decide to pour additional billions into an ill-judged plan of work relief, the prospect of budgetary balance will recede into the remote future. While public spending is stimulating activity at one point, the inhibiting effects of deficit financing upon private enterprise is likely to result in more than offsetting contraction elsewhere. Then demands will be made for a further expansion of Government outlays until the endless process is stopped by sheer inability to finance the program further.

The alternative method of approach would be to cut relief costs without delay, gradually, selectively and, of course, humanely. Essential spending for relief purposes would not be alarming if the Administration showed not only by words but by deeds that it intends to withdraw from the field as soon as possible. Systematic, if modest, economies, initiated without waiting for business to expand, would assist recovery by creating confidence in the future. Recovery can never be forced by methods that undermine faith in the soundness of the monetary and financial system.

Which Is It?

The confusion surrounding the controversy over Secretary Ickes' housing plans grows denser with each passing day. When the proposal which aroused the ire of Mr. Moffett was first outlined, there was no suggestion that the Secretary was considering slum clearance projects. He was planning to construct and sell homes to persons prepared to make small payments. The fact that the houses were to be disposed of on terms almost equivalent to a gift did not remove them from competition with the privately financed home construction which the FHA is trying to encourage. Indeed, it aggravated the offense of the intrusion in the eyes of Mr. Moffett.

The next time Mr. Ickes mentioned housing publicly, he made casual references to slum clearance and subsistence homesteads, although he did not state specifically that he regarded his program as a form of slum clearance. Thursday, however, in a radio address, the Secretary defended his housing project as an effort at slum eradication. The $150,000,000 allocated to the PWA for that purpose, he said, would barely scratch the surface.

"Slum clearance" is a phrase that has a very definite meaning. It refers to the elimination of insanitary, overcrowded and antiquated buildings and their replacement by decent structures that provide proper housing for those who occupied the demolished structures. The PWA funds intended for that purpose were not regarded as a threat to private enterprise because slum clearance is seldom commercially profitable. Indeed, neither Mr. Moffett nor anybody else who criticized the Ickes program has raised any objections to outlays for such reasonable purposes.

By extending the definition of slum clearance to cover his proposed low-cost housing project Secretary Ickes has shown more ingenuity than candor. Low-cost housing, however financed, helps no doubt to relieve congestion in slum areas but that is no adequate excuse for confusing two quite different and unrelated types of activity. It is still uncertain whether Mr. Ickes intends to confine his activities to noncompetitive slum clearance or wishes to embark upon competitive housing construction. The public is entitled to know which course he has in mind.

Shipping Subsidies.

As the Postoffice Department's inquiry into ocean-mail rates draws to a close several aspects of the merchant marine problem stand out in clearer perspective. The cost of keeping American ships on the high seas has been given a thorough airing. If the Postoffice Department can swing over from the role of prosecuting attorney to that of an objective adviser some valuable recommendations for Congress may be forthcoming.

The real issue at stake has been repeatedly confused by comparison of poundage rates with the sums allowed American shipping lines under existing contracts. The Postoffice Department has added to this befuddlement by introducing statistics which seem to imply that the Government is paying for the transportation of mail nearly ten times what that service is actually worth. Of course, the ocean-mail contracts were not intended merely to pay for carrying letters and parcel post, but to keep American shipping lines in operation.

In authorizing the present ocean-mail contracts Congress recognized them as subsidies. But the nature of the contracts has always been confused in the public mind. Instead of accentuating that confusion, the Postoffice Department ought to concentrate upon the separation of subsidies from mail transportation charges. Regardless of what may be said for or against Government support for the merchant marine, the public is entitled to know the exact amount of the subsidy, how it is spent and what results it produces.

The evidence clearly shows that American shipping lines can not exist without Federal aid. Virtually all maritime nations subsidize their shipping lines in one way or another. Even if this policy should be universally abandoned, the difference in ship construction and operation costs in this and other countries would drive most of our overseas carriers to the wall.

With the existing subsidies, which some officials seem to consider unreasonable, American ships are carrying only 30 per cent of our foreign trade. And this country stands at the bottom of a list of nine nations classified on the basis of new merchant tonnage under construction. Great Britain is building 46.1 per cent of the world's new ships and the United States 1.7 per cent.

Considering our favorable balance of trade, it might be unwise to develop a merchant marine that would carry most of our foreign trade. Payments to foreign shipping interests for carrying American goods help to offset our abnormal excess of exports over imports. On the other hand, the necessity of maintaining a fleet that is capable of carrying at least a part of our foreign commerce is emphasized by the current negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements. Those efforts carry as their counterpart a reasonable consideration of American shipping needs.

Mexico's New Regime.

Mexico inaugurated a new President yesterday in an atmosphere of peace but not of complete tranquillity. Gen. Lazaro Cardenas took the oath of office as the culmination of an overwhelming victory at the polls. His administration begins under unusually favorable circumstances, so far as economic and political conditions are concerned. But in the schools and churches of Mexico there is grave apprehension over the policy which the new regime will follow.

Prosperity in Mexico appears to have tempered the program of reforms advocated by the revolutionary party. There seems to be more desire to consolidate economic gains than to initiate new reforms. But the revolutionary idealism sponsored by the dominant party is still a significant factor in Mexican politics. Some observers fear, therefore, that the campaign against the churches will be intensified to offset relative conservatism in other fields.

In spite of the apparent good will which prevailed at the inauguration and the gratifying improvement in domestic stability, the new Mexican President is thus confronted by some very delicate problems. The movement to separate the functions of church and state seems to have had wide popular support. But interference with the church's spiritual duties is an entirely different matter. Likewise, many who helped to rid the schools of aristocratic and sectarian influences are rightly protesting against their threatened subordination to propaganda purposes.

Contacting Regiment.

(From the Detroit News.)

If the New York Herald Tribune is still seeking the most abused word of 1934, we'll give it, and hope we don't get it back. It's "regiment."

What "function" was to 1920, "motivate" to 1924, "meticulous" to 1926 and "rugged individualism to 1933, "regiment" and its kinsman, "regimentation," "regimenting" and "regimented" have become to this year of grace, and then some.

Since January 1 it has filled more gaps in the language than—well, than a regiment. We started the year by discussing the regimentation of the citizenry of central Europe. By June, regimentation had become the inevitable consequence of any swing to the Left, to the Right, or to the point of the jaw. * * *

Now we are living in a land where squirrels regiment nuts, bees regiment honey, half backs regiment their interference, stenographers regiment dates, children regiment letters in order to spell cat and Jim Farley regiments his various political jobs.

Thunder On The Right.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Hutchins Commission on International Economic Relations, after a year of investigation, has submitted its report, which was summarized in The Post. The mere fact that this commission was composed largely of college professors is enough in itself thoroughly to discredit it, for their impracticability as a class, and their subversive tendencies have been thoroughly demonstrated in recent years. It seems that these gentlemen, and many of those charged with the administration of our Government, never learn anything from history or experience.

Among the many recommendations of this commission that indicate a most amazing inepitude, are the following: Continued participation in disarmament conferences; cooperation with the League of Nations, and adherence to the World Court; cancellation of the debts Europe owes us; and the placing of Oriental immigration on a nondiscriminatory basis.

On at least two occasions the questions of joining the League of Nations and the World Court have been an issue directly before the American people, and each time they voted overwhelmingly against any connection with either. It would seem that this should have settled the matter. The court is a creature of the league. Its judges are elected by the council of the league, and it is supported by the league. It is, therefore, and necessarily, absolutely subservient to the league. We can not join the court without joining the league, both of which are inimical to the welfare and interests of the United States, because they are dominated and controlled by nations whose every interest are opposed to ours.

As to disarmament conferences, the one held in Washington a few years ago should be to us an everlasting warning. In that conference we gave up everything, including our naval supremacy, which was an unforgivable betrayal of our country, whereas the other signatory powers gave up nothing. We have been trimmed in every international conference in which we have participated; and furthermore, these conferences not only accomplish nothing beyond prejudicing our interests and national welfare, but create ill-will among the nations.

As to the war debts, while the European nations have reconciled their consciences and sense of national honor to repudiation, and these debts may never be paid, they should not be canceled, so that the debtor nations may be placed in the position of either paying or being branded as welchers and repudiators.

Coming now to the absurd proposal to put the Oriental on a nondiscriminatory basis, it may well be asked if we have not at present enough racial problems in the United States without augmenting and aggravating them by the admission of Orientals. Our experience with them in California and of recent date in Arizona should be a sufficient warning against this proposal of this commission.

Prices And Prosperity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Of all current economic errors, probably the most unfortunate is the generally accepted idea that increased prices mean increased prosperity and are therefore desirable. The fact is that the exact opposite of this is true. During the past century the productive power of human effort has been multiplied many times. By the use of improved labor-saving machinery one man or woman can produce as much as formerly required 10, 20, or even 100 men or women. The purchasing public is thereby justly entitled to greatly reduced prices of all commodities.

But prices have scarcely been reduced at all. Incidentally, wages and salaries should have been correspondingly increased as a logical accompaniment to every economy effected in production. But wages and salaries are always fixed by the law of supply and demand. It is generally assumed that some unknown, mysterious, occult force prevents the consumer from enjoying lower prices and the worker from receiving the increased pay as a result of decreased cost of production.

As a matter of fact, America's greatest economist, Henry George, has demonstrated that it is a wrong system of taxation which is to blame for both high prices and low wages, and that the only way to right the wrong is to abolish all taxes upon capital, labor and industry. In the Old Freedom, Francis Neilson states that in the year 1351, "as long as the serfs in England were free to use the common fields and wastes, wages must be high and prices low."

And likewise in America today we must secure the desired result by freeing land and production through a just system of taxation. It is absurd to put the cart before the horse by artificially increasing prices to the consumer.

A Dissenting Voice.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our intelligence is daily insulted by absurd "ads" of graceful girls pleading for cigarettes after a tennis match or mountain climb in order that "pep" may be restored. Liquor "ads" are equally ridiculous.

Not so very long ago, when athletes started training, cigarettes and "booze" were prohibited. It was an acknowledged fact that smoking "cut the wind" and alcohol lessened energy. But what a change in a few, brief years.

This age is one of pure "hooey"! If people care to drink and smoke, that is their business. But, for Heaven's sake, let's stop hanging halos around whisky bottles and crowning cigarettes!

Turkeys Vs. Tomatoes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Through a printer's error, presumably, one line of a sentence in my letter appearing in The Post of November 27 was omitted, thus obscuring the meaning. The correct sentence is as follows:

The attitude of some cannibals who, tired of meat-eating missionaries denouncing the eating of human flesh, could not distinguish between the eating of human flesh and the eating of goats, etc., was far more consistent than the attitude of carnivorous critics who can not distinguish between tomatoes and turkeys.

MARIE GUNDERSEN.

Correct Deduction.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I feel that there is probably no better indication of the way The Post has improved within the past year than the addition to your columns of the writer whose articles have appeared in the last two Sunday editions under the name of Bett Hooper.

The Post is fortunate in having someone whose name will command attention after a first introduction to her articles. Her individual style, with its graceful and sure handling of words, and her clever and meaty observations are as delightful as rare. These pieces have unusual freshness and charm. I hope we will have more of them soon.

Just as a matter of curiosity, would you mind telling me if the Bett Hooper of the Sunday articles is the writer of the unsigned piece entitled, "Married Men and Mushrooms," which appeared recently in The Post. I thought I could detect a similarity in the style. Either that, or I liked both things unusually well and the favorable impression is my association.

Nebraskan 'Laboratory.'

Editors throughout the Nation who have commented upon Nebraska's decision to replace its traditional Legislature with a one-house, nonpartisan body, have taken the line that this State has set itself on a course in government that will serve as a laboratory experiment for other States. The general inclination is to advise people everywhere to wait and see what Nebraska does with the one-house plan before embarking upon similar adventures.

Many of the editors express the same fears that were urged in opposition to the plan during the Nebraska campaign. They see the menace to the "checks and balances" theory of government. They are not impressed with the suggestion that the quality of laws will be improved. They believe large cities will gain an undue advantage in power in the single house. Finally, they agree that basically it is the men who count in government, rather than the system.

Among the men elected to the next Legislature, who must provide the scheme for the one-house proposal, many differences of opinion are already developing. Some favor a house of 33 members, using the present Senatorial districts. That would be a simple way of avoiding bickering over redistricting the State, with its possibilities for gerrymandering. Others want to give the one-house the limit of 50 members, to insure as wide a representation of population groups as possible.

Now that Nebraska has the law, it becomes the duty of the Legislature next spring to give the one-house Legislature every opportunity to make good. This State, as a laboratory for the whole Nation, is called upon to prove that it can defend the rights of the common man; that it can make State government efficient without destroying democracy. Nebraska has two years to prepare for the new plan. Friends and opponents of the one-house body should forget their differences and join in an effort to launch the unicameral Legislature under conditions favorable to its success.

Not "Openly Arrived At"

Post Office, Saturday.

THOSE Secret Treaties that the European Allies concluded among themselves during the early days of the World War: they provided, you'll remember, for a delectable division of the fruits of conquest—if, or when, conquest should arrive. And when it did arrive, they nearly upset the applecart. In fact, a good many of the apples have been rolling dangerously close to the cart's edges ever since.

Well, in the latter period of the great conflict, did President Wilson offer, by silence, a tacit assent to those treaties?

Or was he tricked?

Or did he seek to enforce his own ideas of a reasonable war-settlement by merely pleading that he had been tricked?

In short, did he know anything about the undercover promises until the United States, after having done its share of the fighting, came to join the peace-negotiations which those promises then so quickly and so vitally affected?

Now Lloyd George utters an emphatic "Yes!"

"The whole series of understandings were disclosed to me for the first time," said President Wilson, "when I arrived in Paris for the Peace Conference."

This statement the former Premier of Great Britain describes as "a palpable misrepresentation of the true (sic) facts."

He speciously softens his charge. He makes it in the installment of his memoirs—"War Memories of David Lloyd George," Vol. III, 1916-1917—just published by Little, Brown & Company. According to their author, Mr. Wilson, the idealistic advocate of only "open covenants openly arrived at," stood "on the brink of his tragic breakdown" when he launched his denial. Therefore, "a lapse of memory was . . . pardonable."

Nevertheless, Mr. Lloyd George asserts that "the whole series" of agreements were meticulously explained to Mr. Wilson by Lord (then himself plain "Mr.") Balfour, when Mr. Balfour was on his famous war-mission to Washington. Balfour, says Lloyd George, even "offered repeatedly to supply copies of the treaties" to Wilson.

So, as the lapse of memory "affects the relations between two great countries, I feel bound," continues the former Prime Minister, "to correct the mistake. Good faith is essential to good understanding between nations as well as individuals."

Certainly. But this insistence upon Lloyd-Georgian international good-will and personal politeness may well strike one sort of reader as having been written with the tongue in the cheek. And this would seem a natural reaction when taken in connection with other portions of the book treating of Wilsonian policies. Mr. Lloyd George doesn't seem to like Dr. Wilson at all.

The British politician says of the American that he declared war without believing it would be "necessary to wage war." Apropos of the effect, on the enemy, of America's entry, the author decries his right to say, in so many words, that Wilson "deliberately dawdled his preparations in order to give the Central Powers full opportunity for reconsidering their attitude." Whereafter follows this passage:

"But that must have been an element in the otherwise inexplicable delay which occurred in preparing American troops for the battleline."

The memorist is not, you see, in a friendly mood. Indeed, it is not only Mr. Wilson that suffers. Nearly everybody mentioned in the volume—well, "almost nearly!"—gets a flick of the lash:

Historian John Buchan merely repeats "gossip" when he announces that Nivelle arranged his big offensive in a ten-minute railroad-station chat with Lloyd George. Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, popular among Washingtonians, is accused of a childish temper. Joffre's strength "lay in character rather than capacity," Haig had a "stubborn mind" which was "transfixed in the Somme. Clever Arthur Runciman's "perfect command of the whole jargon of business" could "awe the ignorant and impress even the proficient"—but "there he excels and there he ends."

Meanwhile, here stands that challenge to Mr. Wilson's ingenuousness. Was the President told by Mr. Balfour of those secret treaties—or was he not?

As the Post-Impressionist recalls the story told in Washington when Mr. Balfour was here on that war-mission, there was, however, a third person present—and that third person is still alive. He is Col. House.

It would be interesting to read a review of Lloyd George's Volume III by Edward Mandell House.

New Deal Diplomacy Meets Test in Cuba

Effects of Our Program There Will Permeate All Latin America, Says Shaw.

We print below the last of a series of three critical articles on the Administration's Cuban policy, written for The Post by Paul Vanorden Shaw, well known as an authority on Latin-American relations. Without subscribing to all of Mr. Shaw's contentions on this complicated subject, we believe that the case which he presents is both informative and significant, meriting attentive public consideration.

By Paul Vanorden Shaw.

IN two previous articles I have described the activities of the Roosevelt Administration in Cuba, asserting that Mr. Welles' schemes of conciliation, constitutionalism and coalition have not produced the desired results. The de Cespedes government petered out at the end of 24 days. The Grau government, though unrecognized, lasted four months and planted seeds which are now flowering despite the determined opposition of the American State Department.

I have also reported the fate of the ideal set-up under President Mendieta. His government was not merely recognized, but showered with gifts; loans, quotas, reduced duties on sugar, the abrogation of the Platt amendment and the negotiation of the trade agreement. In spite of all the forces in favor of the Mendieta regime, strikes, terrorism, insecurity of life, loss of popular support and the growth in the power of the army are its main characteristics.

The election on which Messrs. Welles, Caffery and Mendieta have set their minds has been postponed and the principal candidates and party leaders are in self-exile.

• • • •

THERE now remains to be shown what the direct and indirect results of the Welles-Mendieta policies have been among certain laboring elements in Cuba. On November 11 a spokesman for the Communists of Cuba gave a United Press correspondent an interview which is remarkable as much for its candor as for the facts it brings to light. In quotes we shall place statements attributed to Felipe Gonzales, the authorized speaker for the Communists, and after each a comment on its significance.

"Communism merely awaits a propitious moment to step in and seize the government." When it does, the Communist party will undertake the confiscation, "without compensation, of all sugar mills, sugar and tobacco plantations, factories and banks; repudiation of all national loans, both foreign and domestic, and denunciation of treaties, particularly the new 'Reciprocity' treaty with the United States." This treaty is hastening "the economic ruin" of Cuba.

The mere statement that the Communists will do this is not to be taken as anything but a threat. They do voice the aspirations, however, of many who are not Communists and indicate the direction of the thinking of substantial groups of Cubans.

"There are between 4,000 and 5,000 members of the Communist party in Cuba. This represents an increase of about 500 per cent since the fall of Machado."

This is one of the most significant statements in the whole interview. This increase has been registered in the period of our greatest activity in guiding Cuban destinies, and there is more than mere coincidence in this fact.

• • • •

"ABOUT 30 per cent of the members (of the Communist party) in Cuba are Negroes."

Here we come to the core of one of the social cancers in Cuba. The Negroes may not understand the meaning of Communism, but they do know what it means to be without jobs, homes and food.

They know that when the sugar industry was rationalized by the American owners of the plantations and mills they were displaced by cheap three-month Negro labor from Haiti and Jamaica. They learned under Grau—because he favored them and gave many Negroes positions of importance in his government—that the Negro has rights. When Grau was blocked by the United States it was only natural that they should turn to the party which claimed to have their interests at heart. They are interested in Communism because it offers food and homes and clothing. They have never heard of Karl Marx. They are listening solely to the dictates of their gnawing stomachs.

If the Communists take over Cuba "we expect armed intervention from the United States. And we are prepared to resist until the last drop of our blood." If this comes about we shall have a bitter racial war on the one hand and a shameful international war on the other. If this war does break out, on the one side will be American marines fighting with Batista and his army, and on the other the masses of Cuba. For Batista is opposed to Communism as strongly as any reactionary. He will do everything in his power to prevent a Communist outbreak. If he fails, then the consequences will be horrible beyond all imagination.

The Communist party would be a voice crying in the desert if all the other factors in the present history of Cuba had not played into his hand. Bombs and terrorism strongly indicate that the masses are not better off. They may have chosen a stupid way of expressing their needs but, as a recent writer in the Diario de la Marina has stated, it is folly for the government to try the terrorists in emergency tribunals as a means of ending terrorism. Terrorism will only end, he said, when the underlying causes of it have been removed. And these are hunger, joblessness and homelessness.

MANY months were wasted in going to the root of Cuba's troubles when the United States failed to recognize Grau and the social revolution he represented and refused to shower upon him the gifts which it has dropped into Mendieta's lap. If the pronouncement of the Communist party is only one-tenth correct it reveals graphically a situation which can not be overlooked. And in all candor it should be asserted that the United States must share some of the blame.

When Mr. Welles and Mr. Caffery failed to see or to admit the existence of a social revolution in Cuba, they opened themselves to charges of ignorance or stubbornness. Mr. Welles admitted to me in an interview on January 31 of this year that two interpretations of the Cuban situation were admissible. But he has absolutely and illogically refused to admit that the part of wisdom for the United States was to formulate a policy which should be based on both points of view. He preferred rather to gamble the future of Cuba, the future of inter-American relations on the chance that his view was the correct one. He has planned and worked for the economic recovery of Cuba; he has sought to improve the contractual relations between Cuba and the United States. But he has resolutely repressed with a heavy hand all Cuban attempts to perform the necessary major operations within their country.

GIVEN the expressed ideals of the new generation of Cubans it was clear to most observers that Cuba needed and was determined to work for recovery and reform at the same time.

It may not have been wise on the part of the Cubans to embark on both simultaneously. That was their business, however, and they believed that Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Hull and Mr. Welles were sincere in saying that the new policy of the United States with respect to Cuba was one of "live and let live." At the first sign of independent action and thinking in Cuba Mr. Welles balked. And now, instead of a moderate program of reform, we find a most radical program being put forth and gaining adherents in increasing numbers. The gratitude felt for Mr. Welles' part in ousting Machado has dissolved into resentment because of his constant interference since.

At stake, however, is not merely the person and the reputation of Mr. Welles, nor only the fate of Cuba. "The chief interest and ultimate security of the United States lies in the loyal friendship of the Western Hemisphere," said Mr. Welles himself. "If we fail in Cuba we fail in all Latin-America and all the gains made there by Secretary Hull and President Roosevelt will go for naught."

Cow No. 9,999.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 30.—My Uncle Aleck, I suppose, is one of the most philosophical men in the world. He has the job here of tending to the Kansas cows which the Government sent down with a view to broadening them. His office is a very modern little shack at the entrance to the Government pasture. It was erected by the PWA and is solid white. Inside there is a mural, done by a PWA artist, of cows grazing dreamily on the edge of a sparkling stream.

BARGERON

"Uncle Aleck," I asked, "do you think it right for the Government to be tending to cows like this?"

It was in answer to this that he showed a bit of his rare philosophy.

Removing his pipe from his mouth and holding it aloft as if to emphasize what he said, he replied:

"I don't know whether the Government should be tending to these cows or not, but if they are going to do it, there is one thing I do know, and that is that I am going to do the tending."

It was about that time that a messenger dashed up and handed him a telegram. It was an order from Washington that cow No. 9,999 be transferred to pasture No. 43,200 in South Carolina.

Without a word Uncle Aleck got up and made off to get cow No. 9,999. Apparently she was restless because no sooner than he opened the gate than cow No. 9,999 let out a loud moo, kicked up her heels and started to run. Without a minute's hesitation Uncle Aleck and I took up the pursuit. Down into the city came cow No. 9,999 onto Bugle street, so named after an Indian chief. As the chase continued others joined in it. Pretty soon we must have had a crowd of about 50 persons, and as we continued the crowd kept growing larger.

Finally Mr. Williams, secretary of our Chamber of Commerce, joined us.

"What are they trying to catch her for?" he asked, as he ran along, almost out of breath.

"She's been ordered to another pasture," yelled Uncle Aleck over his shoulder.

"Well, now wait a minute," demanded Mr. Williams, stopping dead in his tracks, and we all stopped with him.

"Why should we sit idly by and let the Government remove one of our industries?" asked Mr. Williams. "We have been discriminated against by every Government since Wilson."

At this juncture up came Congressman-elect Peterson. He has just defeated the incumbent Mr. Parker. Mr. Williams told him the situation.

"I am most delighted that I appeared on the scene," declared Congressman-elect Peterson. "This will be my first opportunity to do something for my people. I shall communicate with Washington at once."

Who should be in the crowd now but his erstwhile opponent, the defeated Mr. Parker.

"This is the sort of demagoguery that brought about Mr. Peterson's election," said Mr. Parker. "He is reflecting a lamentable ignorance of the situation in Washington. The Government has been changed entirely. Formerly a petition might have halted this transfer, but we are now operating under the Tugwell form of government, which provides that the Government officials are to have full and unfettered say while in office and every four years the people may vote in approval or disapproval of what they have done."

"That doesn't seem fair," said Mr. Williams, the chamber of commerce man, "because they do so much in four years that we can't tell whether to vote for or against them."

At this point, Uncle Aleck said he had to do his duty and he was going after the cow. She was found three blocks away, run over by a truck and killed.

"I'll make full report to Washington," said Uncle Aleck, as if it was all in a day's work with him.

New Eyes On Old London

A Parisian Visits the Foggy Thames.

By Andre Vulliet.

(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

London.

AMONG the thousand-and-one ways of being imperial, England, I think, has chosen the less bellicose and the most efficient. Her imperialism is overwhelming. It is like something in the air. You feel it, you breathe it all the time. But there is nothing odious about it.

The fog, so often feared in London, seems to be part of British grandeur. By blurring the outlines, by drowning the scenery in a sort of hazy coating, it creates an unfavorable atmosphere for flashy or noisy greatness. But by shading off the boundaries of space it allows the mind to indulge in limitless dreams and gives London the aspect of an empire of legend's capital.

To each and every Englishman, the greatness of the empire is a natural achievement, a thing that goes without saying. They do not dig up majestic ruins or take the world to witness of their by-gone glory. They just keep on living their history—the history that made them great—adapting themselves slowly to the necessities of modern times, but respectfully carrying on their most impressive traditions as a present testimony of their country's continuity.

London, Rome and Paris have this in common that they are the only three large cities with something "imperial" about them. But London's character is quite special.

• • • •

"ANCIENT Rome and modern Paris are the only two examples of a unique phenomenon," Ernst Robert Curtius, a German author, wrote in his "Essay on France." "Originated as political centers of great states, those two cities have assimilated the national and intellectual lives of their countries; then, further extending their influence, they have become the centers of an international culture for the civilized world."

In Paris and in Rome, Curtius adds, quoting another German historian, "one feels he is living in the center of a human universe." In London alone, I believe, one finds himself in the middle of a world.

Rome embodies an idea of power, of domination, of eternal duration. But the present Rome is, to a certain extent, a museum city. Its 2,000-year-old monuments are as moving as the ruins of ancient Egypt, but are no more alive.

What strikes you in the "Eternal City" is the antithesis between a dead past and the most grandiose modern urbanism. The highway from Rome to the sea, the breath-taking Via dell'Impero are modern expressions of Roman might. Yet, the very width of such thoroughfares is out of proportion with the needs of the city. They are the result of a man's will and make Rome, so to speak, the center of a political ideal.

In London and Paris, on the contrary, past and present are one. Dignity, there, is the product of a slow evolution, which made Paris an intellectual center and London an "imperial" metropolis.

What seems most remarkable about the English capital is that the most casual impressions, such as one gets from looking at the Thames or from watching the changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace, evolve a considerable amount of strength, traditions and dignity.

• • • •

LEANING over the rail of the Tower Bridge, the view extends to the London Bridge, over that stretch of gray waters called the "pool," on which float, probably, the most valuable cargoes in the world. Out of the unreal, like a Whistler's painting, ships from the Seven Seas loom in the misty twilight and vanish in the distance, headed toward warmer climes and brighter suns.

The life of the river is right in the middle of the city, and London itself is the heart of the country. How different from New York, whose harbor is like a door open on the ocean! Manhattan itself is an island, beaten by the wind and detached from the rest of the Nation. Here, the ships are within London, like an island of boats.

The waters of the Thames run through the town like a vital artery and wash the old walls of the houses of Parliament. Overseas trade, one of the main sources of British wealth, which begins and ends at their feet, is thus constantly under the watchful eyes of the British government.

Another sight of London, and without doubt one of the most impressive and significant, is the changing of the guard before Buckingham Palace, the King's residence.

Tall, bear-skinned, the royal guards, with their long bluish gray coats and their white ammunition pouches, look like the last survivors of Napoleon's grenadiers. Whether there are hundreds of people around or not a soul in sight, it does not make any difference. They just stand, like tin soldiers, before the palace gates, with their feet wide apart and the butt-end of their guns alongside their right feet, as motionless as a principle.

• • • •

ALL of a sudden, at 11 o'clock sharp, like those medieval clocks, engineered and painted, that became animated on every hour, the whole scene gets in motion.

Grenadiers and Highlanders parade in the courtyard under the King's windows, with automatic precision. A flag is carried back and forth. Two officers walk stately up and down, while a military band plays classical music and the sentries are being changed.

A real spectacle, indeed, marvelously prearranged and whose number of performances has never been, and never will be, equaled by any show in the world.

This has been going on for years, maybe for centuries. And for as many years, every morning, hundreds of respectful citizens have assembled to see His Majesty's soldiers march away along Pall Mall and do that marvelous, slow march that the English alone know how to do with insular dignity.

Probe Is Started In Election Fraud

Baltimore, Nov. 30 (AP).—Thirty-five witnesses were called to appear as the grand jury today began its investigation into alleged frauds in the House of Delegates race in the Fourth Baltimore District during the recent election.

The Last Month

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps

THE word comes from Latin, decem meaning ten. In the early Roman calendar, supposed to have been arranged by Romulus, the year was divided into ten months, ending with the one called tenth month, or December. Then later the name December was kept, although the last month in the year became the twelfth.

In the earliest Roman calendar there were 30 days in December. King Numa Pompilius cut it to 29, but Julius Caesar made an addition of two days, which December has kept ever since.

• • • •

In the month of December were the Saturnalia, Roman games and festivals held in commemoration of what they believed had been the golden age, in a remote period in the past, under the rule of the ancient deity Saturn. The Saturnalia were marked by general license and unsavory practices, slaves for the time being sometimes exchanging places with their masters. Thus the word saturnalia now may be used for any tremendous row or rumpus or orgy.

Ovid wrote acceptus genlis December, which means that the month of December was pleasing to the guardian deities, because of the Saturnalia. Latin writers variously described December as canus, referring to hoar-frost, meaning hoary, gelidus meaning cold, and fumosus meaning smoky; all of which adjectives describe a Roman winter rather than one of the New England or Canadian style, where the words would have to be more frigid.

• • • •

The Saxons called it the winter month, and the Holy month, because it contained Christmas; which also explains why Germans often call it Christmonat.

In the delightful reminiscences of J. Henry Harper of the famous firm of publishers, a book which appeared only a few days ago, he describes a dinner given to the novelist William Black. The toast Poetry was responded to by William Cullen Bryant, who said that the poet should always be held in grateful remembrance because poetry had saved men and women so much time and labor. He said in his gravest manner, "What could be more useful, more winning, more worthy of being remembered than the immortal song beginning "Thirty Days Hath September——?"

If we don't like December, we can by the miracle of memory live in summer. Barrie quotes a line, "God gave us memory so that we might have roses in December."

Stream Action Up for Study

Robertson, Virginia Expert, to Aid in Plan for Purification.

Lexington, Va., Nov. 30 (AP).—Representative A. Willis Robertson will be among a group of experts attending a conference in Washington December 6 to plan a Nation-wide stream purification program.

Secretary of War Dern will meet with the group, which has Senator Augustine Lonergan, of Connecticut, as chairman.

Mr. Robertson, while he was chairman of the Virginia commission of game and inland fisheries, organized the Virginia Cooperative Committee on Stream Pollution and served as its chairman until he was elected to Congress.

The Virginia committee made a detailed study of stream and coastal water pollution and, through voluntary cooperation of industries, achieved some results. Its chief difficulty was met, however, in attempting to improve the situation with regard to the coastal waters.

Lutheran Students To Attend Session

Lutheran students from 20 colleges and universities in Washington and nearby States will attend the Lutheran Student Conference to be held Saturday, December 8, at George Washington University.

Meiser, of the University of Maryland, are presidents of the clubs. Miss Myrtle Mohagen is general chairman of the conference.

The Rev. N. J. Gould Wickey, D. D., executive secretary of the Board of Education of the United Lutheran Church of America, will be the principal speaker at a dinner to be held at the Church of the Reformation.

Rainbow Woman's Hue Fades to Near Normal

Kansas City, Nov. 30 (AP).—Mrs. Edith Perry, 32, the "Rainbow Woman," whose skin mysteriously changed color numerous times in the course of a week, apparently was on the road to recovery today, hospital attendants said. Her skin has gradually changed from the deep purple hue it had when she was admitted to the hospital a fortnight ago to a brownish shade which is slightly darker than normal.

Her entire recovery is expected, physicians said. They are still seeking to determine the cause of the strange malady.

Matinee Idols Find Spotlight Is Boring

By Ralph E. Renaud.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—As long as there is romance in the world the matinee idol will never die. It is merely the expression itself which has passed. The feminine adulation will continue forever and the modern actor, poor chap, finds it magnified a hundredfold just as his image is enlarged on the screen. And it is one of the real hazards of his profession.

Two actors who have just returned to New York from abroad are treading this perilous path, and both much against their will. They are Tullio Carminatti and Leslie Howard. Tullio can't understand his position. He would be foolish not to know he is handsome and has an engaging accent. But he points out to all bemused maidens and autograph hunters that he is close upon 40 years old and has no desire to receive upon his distinguished Dalmatian shoulders the mantle of Rudolph Valentino.

What buried him under an avalanche of fan mail and made him the victim of a mob scene whenever he went out is undoubtedly that irresistible movie, "One Night of Love," in which he falls, very, very gradually for Grace Moore. It is this certain caginess as a lover which first centered Broadway attention on him in "Strictly Dishonorable." Leslie Howard, too, has that aloof remoteness which seems to spell romance to the girl of today. But both men are serious artists, who find pursuit in public extremely trying. In private each, of course, knows how to protect himself in the clinches.

It may be a pathetic satisfaction to die in the purple as Valentino did at the height of his glamorous career. But it is a bitter thing, once having been heir apparent to every fluttering heart on two continents, to lose the title. Lou Tellegen went through that and, after all, he was not so much older than Carminatti when he scissored himself to death. Douglas Fairbanks has been going through it for some time and his latest publicity won't help him any.

Dainty invitations are fluttering thick and fast upon a number of runners-up in the Broadway popularity contest. Philip Merivale, of that lean distinction and comehither voice, is fighting hard to retain his private life. Bert Lytell, of the provocative profile, has to hustle about more than he likes. Kenneth McKenna and Bramwell Fletcher are distinctly among the fought over heroes. None of them, so far, has been battered about by would-be adorers quite so much as Francis Lederer, who, it is said, had to shut himself up between performances behind the as yet undesecrated ramparts of the New York Athletic Club.

THIS town is all agog over the poems of Princess Alexis Mdivani, nee Barbara Hutton, the five-and-ten heiress. Not that many people have read them, but everybody wants to.

They were privately printed in London under the title of "The Enchanted," and now that some kind friends have given out a copy or so on this side the princess is completely disenchanted. The young lady of the millions dropped into town this week and had this to say about her verses:

"Now I suppose people who read them will say, 'Why doesn't the young lady take up gardening instead?' The truth is I shall never attempt to have my poetry printed publicly for two very good reasons. First, the poems are not good enough. And second because people would not buy them for the poetry but because they wanted to see just what sort of nonsense I had written. But I shall continue to write because I like to."

The princess didn't seem very happy for a princess. True, she has reduced her weight, but to accomplish it she had to go without eating for period of three weeks at a time, confining herself to three cups of coffee a day. And she complained somewhat bitterly of the hostility of people just because she has money. She thought it would be nice to live in China where nobody pays any attention to her.

But as for the poetry, one can print some pretty bad verse, and get it admired, too, if one has the Mdivani millions. Off-hand, your correspondent can't think of a newspaper in the United States which wouldn't be glad to publish the Hutton stanzas, provided they were signed.

A FEMININE character of some local renown, who hasn't a dollar to bless herself with, seemed supremely happy at her last interview and all because she had found a nice quiet home in a Zoo. She is Meshie, the cultured chimpanzee.

Meshie can do a good many things which other girls of her age can't. For example, she could knock the cockiness out of Max Baer in less than a round if she felt like it. But she is a good natured soul who loves to be patted and eats her spinach with a fork. Dr. Harry C. Raven, of the Museum of Natural History, who persuaded Meshie to come to this country as a baby brought her up with his own children. Until they learned to talk Meshie showed a good deal more promise than they did and Dr. Raven's children are by no means backward. Meshie has considerable cultural background by now and is really much more like a human being than a good many New Yorkers you see on the street.

Recently Dr. Raven announced that he had to go to Burmah on a scientific expedition and advertised for a good home for Meshie, who can't be left alone with the children any more because she doesn't know her own strength. He received thousands of propositions. Learning that Meshie delighted to drive nails, a carpenter thought he could use her as a helper in shingling. A garage man promised her a good job at his gasoline pump with NRA hours. One little girl who fell in love with Meshie's picture came for her with a baby carriage.

But Dr. Raven, being a wise old bird, decided that the Chicago Zoo would be safest for Meshie. There she can eat her spinach in peace and pursue her studies of the human race unfettered by a family circle.

GERTRUDE STEIN, sybil of scrambled tenses and originator of Alice B. Toklas, her secretary, has definitely gone over. She is undoubtedly the most popular and accepted visitor New York has had this winter. She goes everywhere and meets everybody. And she is doing to the writing men what the futurists did to the academic artists 20 years ago. That is, she is making them doubt themselves a little which you, dear reader, being a literary person yourself, know is hard to do.

She is certainly an attractive old lady and if she is actually the world's greatest literary hoax she manages to produce an extraordinary effect of sincerity, though nobody knows quite what she is talking about. She has a grand, infectious laugh and a well-developed sense of humor. When some one asks her, "Did you write the autobiography of Alice B. Toklas as a literary concession?" and she answers, "I never concede. I wrote it to make a heck of a lot of money," the effect is irresistible.

But her style is still a bit obscure. She is not yet a regular contributor to the magazines.

NEW YORK is notable for its queer fish, but the queerest has just shown up in New York harbor and on the coast of Long Island, where it is said to be snatching live ducks under the water and devouring them. It is known as the wide-gab, or all-mouth, and is the only known member of the finny tribe which can compete with the Kingfish of Louisiana. What a pity it delayed its visit until the late political campaign was over! It might have gone far.

Memories of Salonica

A Traveler Records Paul's Experiences and the Results of His Work Among the Thessalonians; Disciples Who Mastered Environment.

By William Ellis.

I smell fried fish. Every thought of Salonica—the ancient Thessalonica—brings vivid memories of the bazaars at evening, fragrant with the odor of frying fish. I can not explain it: There are many bigger, better reasons why I should remember Salonica, but, in spite of all, my keenest recollection of old Salonica is the fragrance of the frying fish in the food bazaars.

This lesson plunges us into the midst of a romance-crowded and history-crowded spot. The ever difficult Balkan question centers here: There will never be peace in the Balkans until Bulgaria and Yugoslavia get access to the sea at Salonica or some other neighboring port. The Macedonian question in particular centers here also.

Memories of Philip of Macedon and of Alexander the Great are still alive on our lesson scene. The city of Thessalonica was named for Alexander's stepsister. Later, it was the capital of the Roman province of Macedonia. In New Testament times it was a "free city."

But the Bible has a way of eclipsing secular history. Most persons throughout the world who know of Thessalonica at all think of it first as the scene of Paul's exciting experiences, and as the home of the Christians to whom he wrote the two letters which are the earliest books of the New Testament canon. Jason, Gaius, Secundus and Aristarchus are the best-known citizens of Thessalonica, because they were converts and friends of Paul.

Mind the Calendar.

Not only was this first letter to the Thessalonians the first of all the New Testament writings, with the possible exception of Mark's Gospel, but it was written so near to the date of our Lord's life that its record takes on startling significance. Everybody has heard atheism's vague charges about the unreliability of the Bible's records. It is opportune to pause here and touch upon the subject.

This particular letter of Paul, warmly personal and human, and bearing internal evidence of its authenticity, was written about the year 52 A. D.—that is, some 20 years after the crucifixion of Jesus. Among Paul's congregations were doubtless persons who had known Jesus in the flesh. Still greater numbers were familiar with the story of His life and death, from other first-hand witnesses.

Three Weeks.

As we keep in mind the calendar, we are struck by the further fact that the disciples had already—that is, within a generation—become an active body, with a well-articulated message as to the significance of Christ's life and death. Their program for a new sort of human society was already understood, and being propagated.

This lesson is bad medicine for those highbrows who teach that religion is a matter of slow evolution, and who speciously demand centuries and millenniums for its development. For Paul and his companions had spent only three tumultuous weeks in Thessalonica, before a church emerged.

In short, the life-changing power of the Gospel is so great that it could make over whole communities within a few years; and alter the characters of its converts within a matter of hours or days. What a dynamic was the good news that Paul carried! Three weeks of preaching—and a living church the result!

The Big Idea.

Sticking up like Fujiyama above the Japanese landscape, the high teaching of this Lesson rears its sublime head. That truth is the existence of Christian saints in pagan Thessalonica. As the reek of fried fish pervades the bazaars of Salonica today at sunset, so the odors of idolatry suffused the city where dwelt the Christians to which this letter was addressed. All of the activities of the city were permeated with the influence of paganism, and with the gross immorality which always follows in its train. Yet there were reborn men and women in Thessalonica who lived saintly Christian lives in the midst of all this.

In our day, with its cult of the dominance of environment, we hear even preachers wailing that conditions are adverse to Christian living. Certainly they are; but one intelligent look at the world into which the Gospel came conquering-ly should silence all such whimpering and whining. Christians can be Christians, anywhere and everywhere. The religion that requires the coddling and comfort of congenial conditions is not the religion of Paul and his converts.

We step further the Lesson goes. These early Christians not only withstood their environment, but they overcame it, made inroads into it, changed it. Their faith was so shining and victorious that Paul began his letter with affectionate peans of thanksgiving and jubilation for the way in which they were carrying on. These near-to-heathendom disciples lived such lives, and witnessed so powerful a testimony, that their influence was felt, not only throughout Macedonia, but also in Greece and the neighboring world. A precious lot they cared for environment; they possessed an inner life which was more powerful than any outward circumstances.

Aroused by reports of rapidly increasing juvenile delinquency in the Mount Pleasant and Columbia Heights neighborhoods, members of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church will give serious consideration to the problem at a parish meeting in Fishburn Hall at 7:15 p. m. Thursday.

Lewis Holmes, athletic director of Powell Junior High School, will speak Thursday night of the problems confronting boys living in the area and will outline a suggested solution.

The minister will speak at a joint meeting of the young people of the Mount Pleasant Congregational and All Souls' Unitarian congregations in Pierce Hall at 7 p. m. tomorrow on "The Investigations of the Munitions Industry."

On the Air Today

By George M. Adams, Jr.

YVONNE, Annette, Marie, Cecile and Emilie, the redoubtable Dionne quintuplets, will make their radio debut.

The Columbia Broadcasting System, the Canadian Radio Commission, Dr. Allen Defoe, the babies' doctor; several nurses, and the babies' grandfather, will collaborate in the broadcast.

Care and feeding of the girls will be described as the howls and coos of the infant five are heard from a small modern hospital built on the Dionne farm in northern Ontario.

The broadcast has been carefully timed. The girls will face the microphone just before their evening feeding and should be wide awake.

C. B. S. plans the broadcast for Thursday, December 20, from 8:15 to 8:30 p. m., through the facilities of its Montreal outlet, CKAC.

RADIO'S first three-hour dance program opens tonight on N. B. C. at 10:30 o'clock. Fancy bands, entertainers, an ace master of ceremonies have been signed.

You may dance, uninterrupted, for three hours, with breaks, of course, to tell why you should eat biscuits.

Bands on the program will be those of Kel Murray, Benny Goodman and Xavier Cugat's, heard in that order and introduced by Don Carney, as M. C.

ONE of the finest harpsichords in existence, an exact copy of the instrument on which Bach composed his famous works, will be played by Frank Black, N. B. C. music director, in a special broadcast December 6 on WMAL. Acquired from a Vienna musician, Black's instrument, the forerunner of the piano, was originally made for the University of Vienna, but was sold to a musician until N. B. C. nailed it. Music of the period in which the harpsichord was in general use will comprise the program. Handel's "Largo" is typical.

TONIGHT'S Swift Hour, featuring the stimulating musical comments of Prof. William Lyon Phelps and the works of Sigmund Romberg, will present a sketch about Pietro Mascagni and his famous composition, the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana," on WRC at 8 p. m.

The complete program, with Helen Marshall, Byron Warner, and vocal music to the strains of a 36-piece orchestra, will include: "Stouthearted Men" from the "New Moon"; selections from "Martha" of Hans Flotow; "Helyre Katty" by the Orchestra; waltz from "The Desert Song" with orchestra and chorus; "Malaguena," a Spanish one-step, by the orchestra; selections from Franz Lehar by the orchestra; the Mascagni sketch, with dramatic cast and orchestra; and "The Piano Tuner," by Romberg, presented by the orchestra and chorus.

Maj. O'Connell Dies.

New Agreement Reported, Saving Wheat Conference

Budapest, Nov. 30 (AP).—Adoption of an entirely new method of determining world wheat export quotas by the United States, Canada, Argentina and Australia was predicted tonight by one of the "Big Four" delegates.

The delegate said an agreement had been reached on the principle of alloting quotas on the basis of world demand over a six-year period.

This would mean the virtual scrapping of the London wheat pact of 1933, which used the average 1930-33 acreage given over to wheat production as a basis for determining the export quota of a country.

The asserted agreement, which would save the world wheat conference and its efforts to stabilize the basic cereal, was disclosed just at the moment the outlook for success of the big four's negotiations appeared blackest, and it had been feared that the conferences would break up in failure tonight.

The establishment of a new quota basis is regarded as a signal victory for Argentina, which almost wrecked the conference by insisting on scrapping the 1933 pact formula.

2 Arson Suspects Held in Car Strike

Los Angeles Police Renew Drive on Violences.

Los Angeles, Nov. 30 (AP).—Two men were arrested on suspicion of arson today as police renewed their drive to stamp out violence in the Los Angeles street car strike.

Paul Cross and Frank Streibel, both striking trainmen, were booked on suspicion of the bombing and burning last night of a street car.

H. A. Featherstone, local president of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, which called the strike six days ago, said the bombing "appears to have been the work of someone with bombing experience." He said that as far as he knew none of the union strikers had anything to do with it.

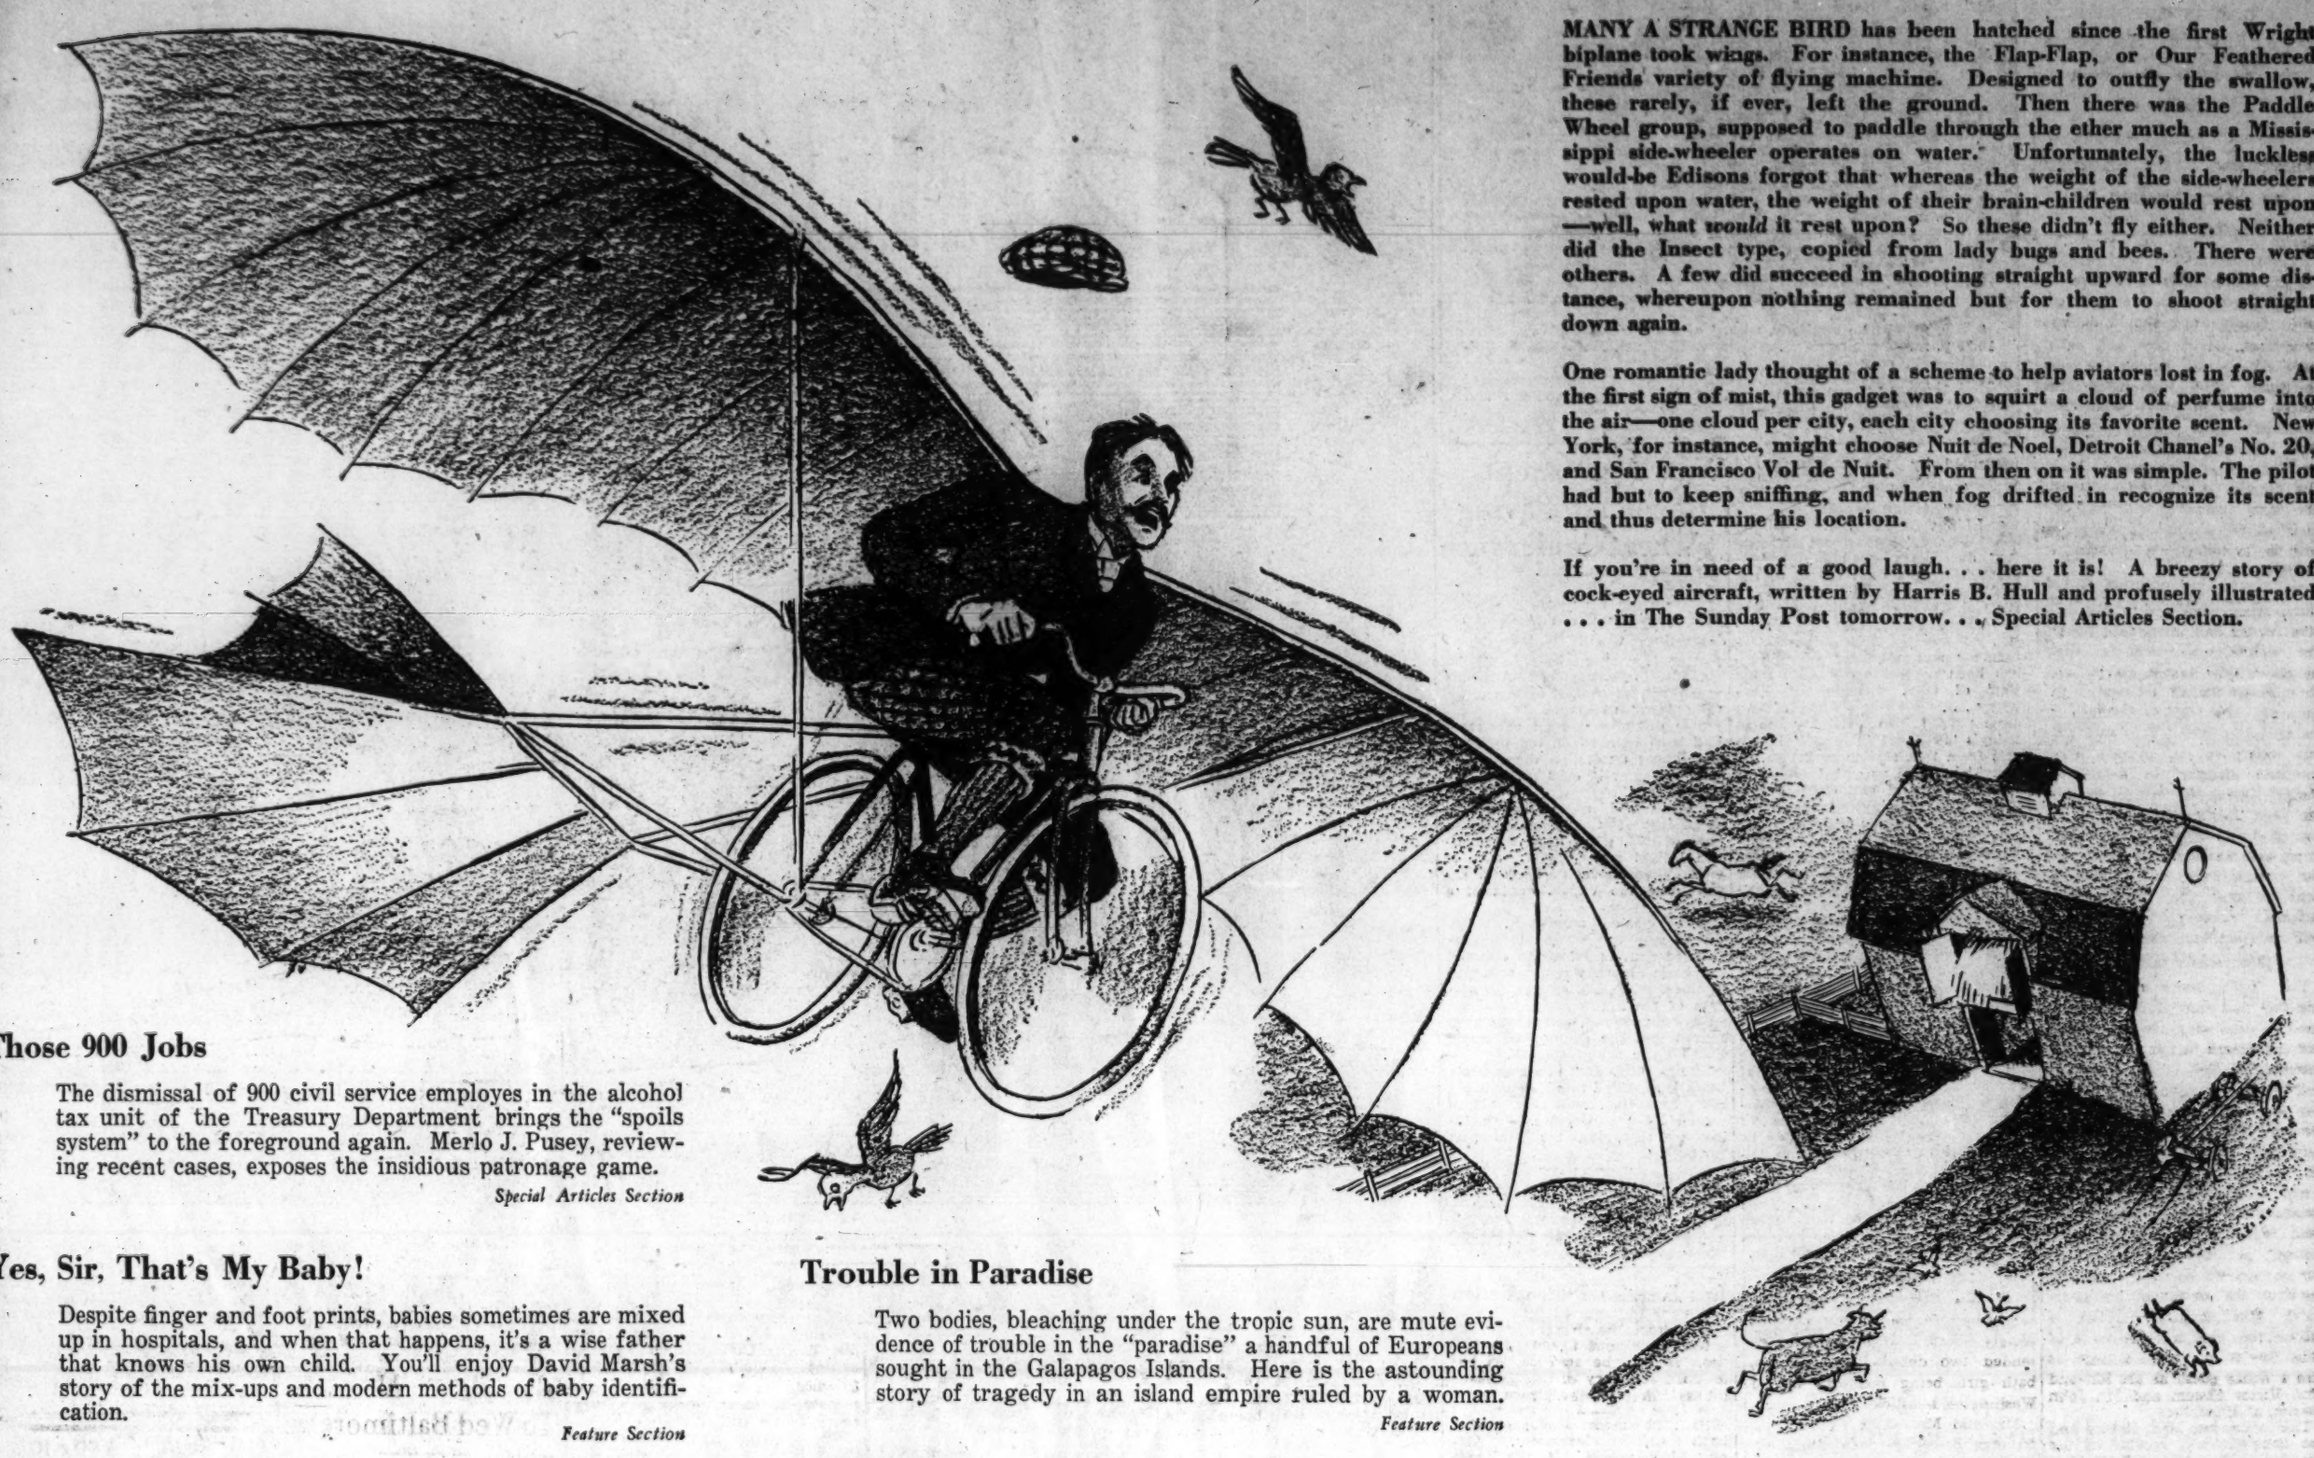
"IF THE BIRDS CAN FLY, WHY CAN'T I?"



MANY A STRANGE BIRD has been hatched since the first Wright biplane took wings. For instance, the Flap-Flap, or Our Feathered Friends variety of flying machine. Designed to outfly the swallow, these rarely, if ever, left the ground. Then there was the Paddle Wheel group, supposed to paddle through the ether much as a Mississippi side-wheeler operates on water. Unfortunately, the luckless would-be Edisons forgot that whereas the weight of the side-wheelers rested upon water, the weight of their brain-children would rest upon —well, what would it rest upon? So these didn't fly either. Neither did the Insect type, copied from lady bugs and bees. There were others. A few did succeed in shooting straight upward for some distance, whereupon nothing remained but for them to shoot straight down again.

One romantic lady thought of a scheme to help aviators lost in fog. At the first sign of mist, this gadget was to squirt a cloud of perfume into the air—one cloud per city, each city choosing its favorite scent. New York, for instance, might choose Nuit de Noel, Detroit Chanel's No. 20, and San Francisco Vol de Nuit. From then on it was simple. The pilot had but to keep sniffing, and when fog drifted in recognize its scent and thus determine his location.

If you're in need of a good laugh. . . here it is! A breezy story of cock-eyed aircraft, written by Harris B. Hull and profusely illustrated . . . in The Sunday Post tomorrow. . . Special Articles Section.

Fete Today Introduces Miss Davies

Brilliant Reception to Be Held at Home in Afternoon.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The parties given by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies (wedding receptions, debut teas, and balls) have always been among the most delightful that Washington has known since the days when they presented their eldest daughter, Mrs. Thomas Patten Cheeseborough, jr., of Greenwich, Conn., the former Miss Eleanor Davies, the most charming and beautiful "deb" of her season, who made her bow to Capital society a number of years ago.

The only trouble is that the two outstanding parties that Mr. and Mrs. Davies have given recently are the wedding reception for their daughter, Miss Rachel Davies and Mr. Aldaces Walker last year on the Saturday after Thanksgiving, and the reception which they will give this afternoon to present their youngest daughter, Miss Emlen Knight Davies, to society. And as last year, the reception falls on the day of the Army and Navy football game, and many of their guests will not return from Philadelphia in time to greet the charming debutante. However the reception will be a brilliant one.

Wing Added to Home.

The Davies home is admirably adapted for entertaining and recently a new wing has been added and completed just in time to accommodate the large group of guests who are spending the holiday week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Davies. Mrs. Cheeseborough is here with her small son, Jo, and Mr. and Mrs. Walker, from New York. Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the late former President Woodrow Wilson, and godmother of Miss Emlen Knight Davies, arrived yesterday and will assist at the reception this afternoon. Miss Margaret Luedke, of Milwaukee, who is a classmate of Miss Davies at Vassar College, is also a house guest, as are Mr. and Mrs. Victor Stamm and Mr. John Stamm, of Milwaukee.

This afternoon Mrs. Davies and her daughter will receive in the drawing room, which will be decorated with flowers sent to the debutante. In the hall there will be masses of chrysanthemums, and in the dining room on the tea table silver bowls of pale pink roses.

Miss Davies will wear a Schiaparelli gown of silver cloth fashioned on simple lines with long fitted sleeves and a brief train. The neckline is high and slightly cowled back and front. She will carry a bouquet of gardenias and orchids. Mrs. Davies will wear a handsome gown of Alice blue metal lace made with elbow-length sleeves and a V-shaped neckline. She will wear a corsage of deep purple orchids.

At the Tea Table.

Presiding in turn at the tea table will be Mrs. Homer Cummings, wife of the Attorney General; Mrs. William E. Borah, Mrs. James J. Davis and Mrs. Pat Harrison, wives of Senators; Mrs. Jesse Jones, wife of the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Miss Margaret Wilson, Mrs. William Mitchell, wife of Gen. Mitchell; Mrs. Huston Thompson and Mrs. T. T. Ansberry.

Assisting the debutante will be Miss Christine Long, Miss Martha Davidge, Miss Frida Frazer, Miss Jane Esther Platt, Miss Emily Moore, Miss Rita Borntraeger, Miss Estherbelle McHarg, Miss Dorothy Marlatt and Miss Margaret Luedke.

Miss Davies will return to her studies at Vassar on Monday, and during the Christmas holidays her parents will give a large ball in her honor on December 25 at the Sulgrave Club.

Miss Mary Y. Wheeler and Mrs. Harry M. Wheeler, aunts of the young debutante, assisted. Miss Wheeler wore a gown of black velvet trimmed with crystal, and Mrs. Wheeler was costumed in black velvet and gold lame.

Those who took turns at the tea table were Mrs. Charles V. Wheeler, Mrs. Charles Y. Wheeler, Mrs. Marshall Exnicios, Mrs. William N. Sturtevant, Mrs. Herbert Lee Smith, Mrs. John Harding, Miss Carolyn Barkolow and Miss Margaret Yard.

Among the debutantes and members of the younger set who assisted Miss Brown were Miss Elizabeth Burke, Miss Mary Elizabeth Damon, Miss Mary Livingston, Miss Moss Lee Love, Miss Charlotte Brown, Miss Katherine Pearson, Miss Margaret McMullen, Miss Marjorie Jane Dampman, Miss Anne Daingerfield, Miss Mary Elizabeth Bouve, Miss Edith Bull, Miss Katherine Brown, Miss Mary Tyler McCormack, Miss Louise Waller, Miss Mathilde Bruce Rodger and Miss Emily Maddox.

Samuel W. King To Arrive Soon From Hawaii

Delegate of Island Has Many Friends in Navy Set in Capital.

Mr. Samuel Wilder King, newely-elected Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, will arrive in Washington with Mrs. King and their three children about Christmas time. Mr. King is a former Navy man, and they will find many friends here in the Navy set. Mrs. Cyrus W. Cole, wife of Admiral Cole, will meet them upon their arrival and help them in finding a satisfactory house. Representatives of Mr. King's two classes at Annapolis, that of 1909 and 1910, have sent him word that they will be on hand to welcome him upon his arrival.

Mr. King retired from the Navy some ten years ago, as lieutenant commander, and returned to Hawaii, where he was born in the days when the islands were a Polynesian kingdom. He will have the distinction of being the only member of Congress who was born in a kingdom that is now a part of the United States.

Mr. King, a member of one of the oldest families in Hawaii, as Oliver Holmes, an ancestor, arrived there in 1793, but a decade and a half behind Capt. James Cook, and a quarter of a century ahead of the New England missionaries, among whom he has progenitors, who guided the destinies of these islands for 100 years.

Double Utility Combination Wins Approval

Jackets Worn With Herringbone or Shepherd Checked Trousers.

By M. A. Weiss.

YOUNG Mr. Washington is in an uproar. He writes, phones and calls personally to say that as long as we devote so much space to clothes for the occasion, why not be specific in the matter of formal day clothes? With the exception of our dress chart, perhaps we haven't been specific in presenting detailed items of formal dress for day wear.

Recently the writer was present at a fashionable wedding held at high noon. Authentic ensembles for formal day wear were observed with interest.

Distinguished Outfit.

An usher at St. Giles looked especially distinguished in a cone button-peaked lapel cutaway, as portrayed in the illustration above. His street costume boasted a smartly flared black Homburg hat and a Montignac single-breasted, velvet collar Chesterfield.

One elderly gentleman, who knew his fashions, even though inclined a bit to the portly side, was distinctive in a two-button, peaked lapel cutaway. His weskit was of self-material. He wore Shepherd check trousers, a white pleated shirt, laydown collar with black narrow polka dot tie, black English tipped shoes with white linen spats and a white carnation boutonniere.

The single and double breasted oxford gray lounge jackets, with a full drape, and either herringbone, striped, overplaid or shepherd checked were exceedingly good-looking. The variation from the plain striped trousers is evident, and very pleasant relief. The combination of the lounge jacket and contrasting trouser with correct accessories finds ready acceptance because of the double utility purpose of this outfit. It can be worn as a business suit, for formal daytime purposes, as a cocktail ensemble or for Sunday evenings when it is not proper to don formal evening wear.

Correct Details.

Some things to be observed for correct detail is to have the gloves and waistcoat to match in color. Collars should invariably be white and starched, although the bosom of the shirt may be of a solid pastel tint in blue, gray or helio. Bow ties in polka dots, ascots in spittalsfields, macclesfields and solid color failles, and striped silk four-in-hands are in good taste. Black shoes only. Avoid the wrist watch and wear a pocket watch. To top off the situation you may wear a silk topper, a black or dark gray Homburg with bound edge or a derby. Sticks and umbrellas finished in malacca are smart, though by no means the only type. Avoid sporty sticks of the blackthorn, ash, and whangee types.

The formal day outfit is coming into the fore with much greater impetus than is usually accorded ensemble fashions. This in a large measure is due to the leisure given the man under this present regime. Parties, weddings, ecclesiastic occasions, cocktail parties at 4 p. m., have given a continental flare for the daytime outfit.

For information on where to find items mentioned, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Men's Fashion Editor of The Post, or telephone NA. 4200.

The young man about to attend holiday services is correctly groomed and clad. He is wearing an Oxford gray cut-away coat with peaked lapels. His trousers are black and white striped worsteds sans cuffs and very high rise. He is wearing a gray double-breasted weskit, patent leather cloth-top shoes, a blue cheviot shirt with white starched fold collar and cuffs. His tie is a Spittalsfield pattern in silver, and accessories include the low-wing collar and scot puff tie with pearl pin. The correct silk hat. Mocha gloves and pipe-stem jointed malacca stick.

Leather Luggage Slips; Color Now in Vogue

Canvas, Rawhide, Pigskin and Sharkskin Are Among Popular New Materials, While Fittings Follow Streamline Idea.

CHRISTMAS and the increasing urge to travel seem linked together in the gift-seeking minds of Washingtonians. Small wonder, since today the purpose of a journey is frequently the journey itself. People are traveling not so much as a means of getting from one place to another, but simply to travel. Such being the case, the ways and means of travel particularly luggage—receive a new importance.

Gone is the day when the traveler could dart into the attic, dig out a battered carpet bag straw telescope or rawhide suitcase and set out for parts unknown. Today even your tourist camp Ulysses turns up his nose at the bulky, obsolete type of luggage. Result? New, lighter and more colorful carry-alls, in materials other than leather. Yes, leather is slipping from the luggage throne.

Weight Is Important.

In these days of rapid (particularly air) travel, weight is an important consideration. The automobile mode of transportation has made compactness an important factor due to the limitation of space. But not only does the ardent traveler demand compact luggage, but he wants color, plenty of it for identification and looks. If he has a new and gleaming car, he wants luggage that's new and gleaming. He hates to ride on a train that's chrome fitted, has a radio and air conditioning system and everything modern, with a shabby suitcase sticking out of the rack. It simply won't do. Hence these innovations.

Colorful canvas, first discovered by the ladies, in luggage, now is taken to heart and hand by the sterner sex because it is light, durable and colorful. Rawhide is new and smart, since it combines all the advantages of the former, plus the toughness of leather. Pigskin hits along the same lines but is rather an expensive item. Seal grain, football pebble grain and other processed skins are supplanting cowhide . . . these materials are smart and can take it. Sharkskin is another tough lightweight that makes into neat, sturdy and light luggage.

Yule Gift Suggestion.

Fittings, too, follow the streamline and convenience idea. Slide fasteners replace old clumsy hardware, and compact hangers, drawers and compartments replace old shifting spaces. In fact, one wardrobe suitcase on the market can contain more clothing, inch for inch, than two old fashioned suitcases. It has every inch scientifically planned, for utility, and in addition to saving space, it keeps wrinkles and creases out of the garments. There's scarcely a chap who won't be delighted with new luggage for Christmas . . . that may solve some of your gift problems.

Woman Kleptomaniac Steals Sleuth's Purse

When a detective in Tokyo was sent to search the house of a woman suspected of being a kleptomaniac, he found a trunk full of cotton goods, 10 pairs of Japanese sandals, 20 pairs of socks, 10 pairs of children's shoes, 30 jars of cosmetics, 60 coats, 6 shawls, and a box of sweets. He also found when he got back to the police station that the woman had picked his pocket and stolen his purse.

What's Puzzling You?

TO BE correctly dressed for the occasion without being foppish is the mark of the gentleman. There is a modern etiquette in dress as important as the etiquette governing conduct. The men's fashion editor of The Post is prepared to answer queries on the what, when and why of sartorial good taste. Put your questions to him.

Don't Mix Stripes.

MEN'S FASHION EDITOR: I have been told that it is improper to wear striped neckties with British striped shirts. Is this so?

• • • •

B. H. P.

SIR: The monotony of stripes on stripes, together with the optical illusion formed, makes it more advisable to wear an all-over figure or solid-color tie.

Buck Shoes for Town Wear.

• • • •

J. K. R.

SIR: Yes.

Personal Reply Necessary.

MEN'S FASHION EDITOR: Please tell me where I can get a lined raincoat, and lined overshoes, such as I recently saw in a fashion publication.

SIR: You'll have to send me a self-addressed envelope for the answer to that one.

Blue Mascara Gives Luster To Pale Faces

Pale Violet Eye Shadow Adds Mystery to Orbs of Brunettes.

By Frances Mangum.

SOMETIMES it takes but a peep in the mirror to subdue our festive spirit. Virtually every woman has known the disconcerting feeling that comes of looking "washed out" when the party is in full swing. Usually she blames it on the color of her frock, the shade of her face powder, or her hostess' cruelly harsh lights. But the real reason in nine cases out of 10 is lack of eye make-up.

Few American women have such brilliant natural coloring of skin, hair, and eyes that they can preserve a fresh scintillating look throughout an entire evening without the aid of mascara and eye-shadow. As a result you find among women at almost any social gathering several who look about as festive and brilliant as if they were in the midst of the family washing.

Candlelight Flatters Appearance.

Candlelight is notorious for making even the plainest creature assume an unwonted glamour and beauty, but unfortunately few hostesses or night club owners are so romantically inclined that they confine themselves to this ancient and flattering method of lighting. That leaves it up to us, if we want to look our best, to offset the trying qualities of electric lights by the judicious application of eye make-up.

Many women who would welcome the beautifying effects of eye cosmetics hesitate to use them because of a feeling that they may prove harmful. There need be no fear with the better types of mascara, for this kind of eyelash darkener is in no sense a dye, but merely a surface coating that could be smeared all over the skin with no other than ludicrous results!

Suggestion for Party-goers.

If you are one of those party-goers who is accustomed to retire at intervals to the dressing room, there to gaze with disgust on your pale, drab-looking countenance, try this: Touch your lashes lightly with a becoming shade of mascara, and smooth a bit of eye shadow matching your gown or your eyes, on your upper lids.

If you are a blonde or medium in coloring, you will find, much to your surprise, no doubt, that blue mascara will give your eyes lovely, starry depths that they ordinarily lack. For brunettes, black mascara is usually most flattering, while a pale violet eye shadow gives the eyes mystery that is in keeping with dark exotic coloring.

Cobra Venom Is Used As Morphine Substitute

Cobra venom is being used as a substitute for morphine to alleviate pain in an effort to curb the narcotic habit. This fact was made known when Richard P. Hobson, president of the World Narcotic Defense Association, addressed the seventh annual meeting of the organization recently in New York. Dr. Adolph Monaelesser, who conducted the research resulting in cobra venom, was so ill from the results of his experiments that he was unable to attend the meeting.

No Men Compare With Her Father for Ideals and Standards, Woman Laments.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I had a wonderful Christian father of the old school whom I idolized as he had a beautiful character and was always so kindly and I never heard a harsh word from him, although he was an invalid for years and in pain most of that time from an incurable disease.

• • • •

Since he died I have met many men, but none to compare with my father in ideals and high standards. Friends tell me I expect too much of men; that I am unconsciously critical of them and compare each one with my father; in other words, that I have a "father complex."

• • • •

When I meet a man who drinks or uses profanity or has some other fault I feel disgusted and think my father would not have done that, and then I withdraw into my shell and lose all interest in him. Men sense my unspoken criticism of them and several have said they like me, but very often feel very uncomfortable with me, as they feel I am overly critical.

• • • •

Am I to blame when I was raised in a home of high ideals, where no drinking or profanity was allowed? Must a young woman let down the bars and discard her early teachings and sink to men's level, in order to make them comfortable in her presence? READER.

Comparison Invidious.

DEAR READER: Certainly you are not to be blamed, but rather, congratulated, on having been reared in a home of high ideals, and in expecting that mankind should measure up to your image of noble conduct. However, you are laying waste to that heritage of idealism in a profligate manner, in permitting it to make of you a mental, moral and social snob.

• • • •

To luxuriate in the possession of a "father complex," or in any other type of emotional complex, is to confess cowardly full flight from reality; a refusal to accept life on its own terms and wrest the best from it in hand-to-hand combat. As a matter of fact, you are weakly willing to go to your grave frustrated and disillusioned, dividing the blame for the travesty between your father, on the one hand, and mankind on the other.

• • • •

While a young woman has every reason to guard against laxity in conduct, she has equal reason to guard against being a feminine stuffed shirt. No young woman possessing intelligence, sympathy, understanding and a happy disposition, who is genuinely interested in people, need let down the bar of her moral reserve or make dangerous compromise with her standard of ethics, in order to make men comfortable in her presence.

• • • •

Men are like children in that they react unconsciously to the behavior pattern subtly suggested to them by an interested vis-a-vis. Expect a man to be ill-mannered and offensive, and with surprising frequency he obliges by being just that. But bring to him the expectancy that he is fastidious in habits, noble in spirit, and cultivated in mind, and nine times out of ten he'll exert his potentialities to the utmost to justify that expectation.

• • • •

I think you are more at fault than the men you meet. And your principal fault is in making invidious comparison between them and your father. In the very nature of things, it is impossible that healthy, high-spirited young men should possess the dignity of conduct, the gentleness of spirit, the Christian philosophy which distinguished your father in his declining years of invalidism. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write to her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

COMES a wail from a frantic bachelor:

"I'm going to visit my nieces and nephews and I never know what to talk to them about. When they're still in the cradle, I can say 'boo-boo' or 'hootchy-kootchy' and chuck them under the chin. But with the older ones, I'm totally at a loss."

Children are easier to talk to than grown folks, because their interests are easier to discern. A question or two will serve to bring out whether they are most interested in school, a new pair of shoes, how an airplane works, or travel and adventure. Your first few questions may not hit the mark, but persist in bringing up various topics gradually and you are certain to discover the things they are interested in. Once conversation is launched, there is no further difficulty, for they will carry it on, so long as they have an interested listener.

But your interest must be real, not assumed. And above all things, talk to them in a natural, conversational tone and not in special voice which too many people adopt in talking to youngsters, and which they invariably detect as condescension.

Portrayal of Emotions Trombone's Main Role

Harris & Ewing.

Instrument Well Known in Germany at End of Middle Ages.

The series of articles on instruments of the orchestra, of which this is the thirteenth, is presented as preparation for the children's concerts by the National Symphony Orchestra, to be sponsored by The Post. The first concert will be given Monday afternoon at 3:15 o'clock in McKinley High School.

The trombone, like the trumpet, is of ancient origin. At the close of the Middle Ages, trombones were well known in Germany.

The name trombone comes from "tromba" and means a large trumpet. It is called the slide trombone because the tubes slide in and out to adjust the precise pitch. It has neither finger holes nor valves, but the lengthening or shortening of the tube by sliding it up or back is enough to produce all the tones of the scale. Its tube is about 9 feet long, and its compass is slightly in excess of two octaves.

The symphony orchestras of the present generally contain three tenor trombones and one bass trombone, though when they are used in separate parts, the names given to them are somewhat misleading. The trombone parts are written as they sound, but the tenor trombone may have its music in the alto, tenor, or bass clef. The trombone is hard to play, as it demands much breath from the player. Composers therefore employ it for only a few notes at a time, with frequent rests.

The use of the slide makes fairly rapid passages possible on the trombone, especially if they lie largely in one harmonic series, and can be blown without much change of position. Rapid execution may be used by a solo player to dazzle an audience; but in orchestral work the trombone is treated more slowly.

The trombone is a most important instrument in picturing heroic emotions, as its tones in orchestral work may be made grand and noble. It may portray almost every broad emotion, from sacred calm to the wildest strains of martial glory. It also has a threatening quality, and its sombre tones are excellent for tragic effects.

Mendelssohn admired the trombone very much, reserving it for the most solemn occasions. Schubert obtained good effects by using soft trombone tones against the strings. With the use of the slide the trombone can get down to the lowest E on our pianos; and this tonal growl is found in Wagner's opera "Siegfried."

Pantry Corner Lessens Duties Of Housewife

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THE PROBLEMS of a housewife are legion, and as a usual thing the credit she receives is paltry. Day after day she racks her brain for some tempting dish to serve for dinner. She must devise delicacies to tempt picayunish appetites, provide tasty tid bits for casual callers, and have something on hand to appease the between-meal hunger of Junior.

In many families it not only is her job to plan these things but to prepare them as well. A local store made an admirable attempt to lessen her trials and tribulations when the management dedicated a "pantry corner" to the housewife. There is one all-inclusive specialty here—good things to eat. In many cases she is able to buy them already prepared; in others they come conveniently packaged so that she has only to add a finishing touch or two.

In the "pantry corner" she is sure of two things—she'll find something new and different, and something which saves time and trouble.

There is, for instance, a muffin and waffle mix which costs only 29 cents. A butterscotch icing needs only butter, water and sugar to be ready for the cake. This is only 15 cents. Tall, slender cans of imported frankfurters, 15 cents a can, are excellent on toasted buttered crackers for a light bridge repast. Crystallized fruit for the Christmas stocking may be bought in bulk for very little. Ice cream put up in cans is all ready but the freezing. A hard sauce is primed for the pudding.

A large flat can of date pudding needs only to be heated to be served piping hot for a rich, tasty dessert. A spice cake and devil's food mix make delicious and successful cakes, say those who've tried them. As for a molasses cookie mix, even a child could turn it into crisp brown cookies!

Kitchenware Sale Is On.

The budget which ordinarily shrinks during a shopping tour will still have a bulge or two if you take advantage of the kitchenware sale going on in the basement of a downtown store. Such a raft of things as you find for only 8 cents! There's the famous old drain doctor who winds his way down your drain pipe and loosens the clogging conglomeration. There is a small strainer, ice picks, cake, bread and meat knives, wooden spoons, fruit corers, and a myriad of other handy items.

Dancing Andy Popular.

A dancing Andy does the fanciest jig your eyes ever did see. One moment he's up, the next he's down, and in between times he's both. Adults find a certain fascination in the way this mechanical toy does everything from the turkey straw to the toddle. Children, of course, are delighted with the click-clack of his large feet and the accompanying gestures of his tin hands.

Dancing Andy costs only 19 cents and he's worth a fortune in fun.

Age Adds Charm to Recipe.

Thirty or 40 years does drastic things to people but adds to the charm of a recipe. For a long time now a Washington woman has catered to the appetites of her friends and family with a certain molasses nut loaf which her grandmother found especially popular many years ago.

Every day she makes a new batch so that those who care to call for, or order, some are sure to find it fresh. Inevitably, those who taste it once come back for more. It has a rich, sweet flavor that leaves you wanting more.

Men particularly favor it. Perhaps they see it as a relief from the usual chocolates, or perhaps, it reminds them of candy their grandmothers used to make. At any rate, many of Mrs. "Candy Maker's" customers report their husbands frequently surprise them with a "Why don't you order some more of that honest-to-goodness candy?"

Wooden Ware Newest.

Apropos of our mention the other day of the wooden table wear featured in a local shop comes this report from Paris:

"Smart shops are featuring wooden handled knives, forks and spoons. Smart women are buying them and using them for informal daytime parties. One outstanding hostess has amazed her friends with midnight suppers at which French salads in wooden bowls, pottery plates and wooden table wear contrast strikingly with the ladies and gentlemen in evening clothes."

New Kitchen "Placques."

The newest in kitchen "placques" is made of oil cloth with several convenient compartments. Two of them are for memo pads; one for a pencil. Below is a large space, which holds two hot-pan pads.

You simply hang the whole thing on the kitchen wall and you're ready at a moment's notice, with pad and pencil, or panholder.

English Wafers Delicious.

A three-pound box of delicious wafers costs about half what you'd expect. It's an old English brand that has been popular for generations. The George Inn in England, famous for its hospitality, gives them an enthusiastic indorsement.

The Hold-Up With Two Stoppers.

The mechanics of the simple hold-up by the declarer at a no-trump contract should be well known to all. A hold-up is made to interrupt the line of communication of the defensive team and thereby prevent it from running a suit. Most common of all is the simple hold-up, where the declarer, holding the Ace as his only stopper, does not play this Ace until the second or third round of the suit; but there are also hold-ups with more than one stopper. I once saw a hand where the declarer's best play was to hold up at trick one, holding the Ace-King-Queen-deuce of the suit. Though hands like that are very rare, it is not particularly unusual to hold up with the Ace and King. A hold-up of the latter type occurs in the hand below:

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

	♠ 7 6 3 ♡ K J 2 ◇ J 10 4 3 ♣ J 7 2
♠ Q J 10 9 4 ♡ 10 5 3 ◇ A 6 ♣ 10 9 4	N W E S	♠ 5 2 ♡ 9 8 7 6 ◇ 9 8 5 ♣ A 8 6 3
	♠ A K 8 ♡ A Q 4 ◇ K Q 7 2 ♣ K Q 5

South	West	North	East
1◇(1)	1♠	Pass(2)	Pass
Dbl.(3)	Pass	2◇	Pass
2NT	Pass	3NT(4)	Pass
Pass	Pass

Against the three no-trump contract West quite naturally opened the spade Queen. South had two spade stoppers and might have fulfilled his contract even if he had won the first round of spades. To get nine tricks he had to set up at least four tricks in the minor suits and to do this he had to let the opponents in twice with their two Aces. Nevertheless, if he won the first spade trick with the King and then guessed properly which minor suit to play first, he could fulfill his contract.

However, on the opening lead of the spade Queen South did not win the trick, but stayed off with both honors. This simple hold-up made it immaterial which minor suit was tackled first and South was released from the necessity of guessing. West continued with another spade and South won with the King, and he now could play either minor suit in complete safety.

Had South won the first round of spades and then played clubs first, he would have lost the hand.

What Today Means

"Sagittarius."

IF DECEMBER 1 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 4:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 8:30 to 10:30 p. m.

The course of December 1's events may reflect your own mental attitude, so if you wish to have an enjoyable one, let nothing but pleasant thoughts occupy your mind. If there is a matter requiring your attention, it is advisable not to let a social engagement cause you to neglect it, for unpleasant complications might arise.

If a woman and December 1 is your natal day, you possess probably one of the greatest of all gifts, the faculty of not only being happy yourself, but being able to make others likewise. The fact that you do not make a god out of money may be the means of attracting it to you. A profession enabling you to doctor to the mental as well as physical ailments of mankind might give you the opportunity of demonstrating your unselfishness. Nursing, kindergarten and social welfare work might prove of great interest to you.

The child born on December 1, generally, as it grows up, proves to be a veritable ray of sunshine in its home. Everything possible should be done to shield this child from the sordid and seamy side of life. Its reading requires careful supervision, as does its associates.

If a man and December 1 is your birthday, your sense of humor, as well as ready repartee, assures both popularity and many friends.

Miss Brooke's Recipe Wins Weekly Prize

Here's How She Prepares Cornmeal and Egg Spoonbread.

By Dorothea Duncan.

EGGS ARE POPULAR whether served for morning, noon or evening meals, according to the recipes that were entered in The Post's recipe contest this week.

First prize, $3, is awarded to Miss Belle Brooke, 302 Thompson street, Staunton, Va., for her recipe for cornmeal and egg spoonbread; second prize, $2, goes to Miss Myrtle Keys, 10 Quincy street, Chevy Chase, Md., for her recipe for oyster omelet, and third prize, $1, to Mrs. P. Thornhill, Seat Pleasant, Md., for her recipe for Southern eggnog.

Cornmeal and Egg Spoonbread.

¾ cup white cornmeal
½ teaspoon soda
1 cup buttermilk or clabber
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking powder
3 eggs
1 tablespoon butter or lard

Place meal, salt and butter in a hot bowl, scald with boiling water, stirring constantly with a slit spoon. Put in enough water to make a thick, creamy mush. Cool slightly, put soda and baking powder into the milk and add to the mush, mixing well. Add the beaten eggs and beat all well. Put into a hot, greased baking pan and bake about 30 minutes. Serves five.

Oyster Omelet.

12 large oysters
1 tablespoon flour
6 eggs
Pepper and salt to taste
4 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 gill milk
Pepper and salt to taste.

Fry oysters after drying them well. Fry to a delicate brown and keep hot while preparing omelet.

To egg yolks, add chopped parsley, salt, pepper, flour and milk and beat well. Melt tablespoon butter and beat into eggs. Meanwhile have large skillet or omelet pan heating on fire with two tablespoons butter in it. Do not let butter fry, but merely heat. Beat egg whites vigorously and fold into yolks. Pour into hot pan and when set, place oysters across center. Fold and serve at once.

Southern Eggnog.

Beat five eggs with five tablespoons of sugar until light and they stand alone, and add seven tablespoons brandy, which cooks the eggs. Add one-half pint of double whipping cream, whipped almost to a batter and, lastly, add three egg whites beaten until stiff and dry.

Eggs Suisse.

Cover the bottom of a baking dish with four tablespoons of butter. Scatter over this grated cheese. Break as many eggs as are wanted, but take care not to break the yolks. Season with salt and pepper. Almost cover the top with milk. Cover with grated cheese. Bake in a slow oven about 15 minutes.

Cheese Fondue.

6 slices stale bread
1 cup milk
Speck cayenne
¼ teaspoon mustard
2 eggs
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup grated American cheese
⅛ teaspoon paprika

Cut bread in one-third-inch slices. Cut off most of the crust and cut in finger lengths. Arrange in greased baking dish. Mix other dry ingredients together and pour over the bread. Set in a pan of hot water and bake at 350 degrees Fahrenheit until custard is set.

Bread Pudding with Brandy Sauce.

3 slices buttered stale or toasted bread
1 pint milk
½ cup shredded coconut
3 eggs
3 tablespoons sugar
¼ cup whole raisins

Cut bread in squares, lay one-half in bottom of baking dish. Beat eggs, add milk, sugar, raisins and two-thirds of coconut. Pour mixture over bread. Add other half of bread and sprinkle remainder of coconut on top. Bake in a slow oven 40 minutes.

Brandy Sauce.

½ cup 4x sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 tablespoons brandy
1 tablespoon soft butter
1 teaspoon cream

Mix sugar and butter well, add cream, vanilla and brandy. Beat until smooth.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Separated through a series of misunderstandings, in spite of their love for each other, Dick and Jocelyn Crane are on opposite sides of the Atlantic. Jocelyn has become involved in the romantic affairs of her hosts in Paris, Ollie and Rita Keene. Meanwhile, Dick, in New York, is the object of Mary Derby's affection.

IT WAS SEVERAL days later that Dick, in his office on the other side of the Atlantic, sat before the telephone and twirled a number that flashed into his mind.

For the first time in days, his boyish crooked smile touched Dick's lips, breaking the thin line. "Hello, Mary. May I run up and see you a moment?"

A strange shyness overlaid him as rather slowly he took the hushed, carpeted stairs. On the third landing Mary waited, in something blue and soft and trailing, her red hair glinting to the tilt of her pointed little face.

"Dick! I'm so glad!"

"Gee! It's good to see you again, Mary." He was still holding on to her hand, his gray eyes hungrily taking in the room, so cool on this hot night. So—comfortable.

Prompt Confession.

"I suppose you've guessed Lynn didn't come back with me," Dick began abruptly, as he settled in the chair Mary offered him.

"I'm so sorry, dear." Mary was gentle, but her lids drooped over her light blue eyes to hide what he must not see—yet.

"Mary, I'm going to tell you this much," he said somberly. "Through no fault of hers, apparently, your necklace was broken and half the pearls lost. Lynn has what's left of it. She didn't give them back to me. Up to the last moment, I expected her to sail. Of course," he wheeled about on the blue rug, "I consider myself responsible——"

"Please don't talk about it any more, Dick." Mary got up to face him. "It doesn't make any difference—really, now you're back. You and I are going to be sensible—" She couldn't help stepping over to him and touching his arm. "I haven't given up one of our plans."

Dick Was Determined.

The muscles of his jaw stiffened, the steel gray of his eyes closed against her: "Our plans are off." he rapped out. "I don't know what I'm going to do Mary. You'll get every penny Jocelyn and I owe you, but—I'm not taking any more help from anyone." He turned away.

"Don't be a fool," Mary said sharply, but her heart sank. His state of mind was more serious than she had believed. "You're not giving up, Dick. You're not."

"What if I am?" He drank. Set down his glass. All the bitterness in him welled up and out. "I've made a fine mess of things," he went on savagely. "Thank God, my insurance will take care of the debts I'll leave——"

Still Loved Jocelyn.

Dick's fingers gripped into her arms. "Mary—I think you're one of the grandest women God ever made," he said harshly. "You're lovely, sweet, desirable.

"Then why——?" came ever so faintly from Mary.

"You ask that?" He did not touch her again, but he stood very near. "When I tell you there's nothing I can offer you or any one else? If ever I get out of this—if ever I do—well, then it might be different. But now——"

Very slowly Dick bent and kissed her forehead. "You're wonderful, Mary," he said. "I don't know—I don't know anything. Shall we leave it at that——?"

Jocelyn lost all sense of time as she went about the task of reviving Ollie Keene, who lay on the floor, his breathing still labored, his face a network of purple.

If he didn't come to soon, she would have to call a doctor. But the salts were taking hold. "Go—way—" he mumbled, and feebly pawed at the air.

In her relief, Jocelyn shook him. "Ollie, it's Lynn—for Heaven's sake, get up. I thought you were dead."

Door Bell Rang.

"You're an angel, Lynn," he managed. "The whites' li'l woman in the worl'. Where's Carrie?" It was all coming back to him. "Where's that——?"

"Ollie, we've got to go," Jocelyn said earnestly. "Can you walk?"

He lurched forward on the couch. Sank back with a groan. "Legs won' work, Lynn. You go 'way. I'll fix her. I'll——"

"I won't leave you here," Jocelyn cried. "You're not fit to take care of yourself. For Heaven's sake, try—try to walk. You can lean on me."

Then the bell rang, stiffening them to silence. Its shrill impatience jangled through the place, tapping on Jocelyn's nerves.

"Don't answer." Ollie's voice was hoarse, and now indeed he did desperately try to stand, but wavered back, sitting on the edge of the couch. The bell went on ringing.

"I can never——" he began brokenly.

She had gone, walking her free, beautiful stride, into the living room toward the jarring summons that would not be quiet. She paused only a second, her hand on the latch, then pulled the door open.

Visitor Was Rita.

Rita Keene stood there, in dark tulle with summer ermines, her small head haughty in its lacquered blacks and whites slashed with the red of her scornful mouth. Ready for anyone on the other side of that door.

But not for this! "Lynn! What are you doing here?" The dark iris blue of her eyes had glints in them between black, curling lashes.

"Why, Rita, I——Ollie sent for me." Jocelyn's heart sank as she stood back for Rita to enter. Carrie must have done this, hoping that Rita would misunderstand the situation.

And that was exactly what Rita was doing. "So Ollie sent for you! That's rather extraordinary, isn't it? Someone sent for me, too." The husky sweetness that had been in her voice only that afternoon for Jocelyn was gone.

"He was in trouble," Jocelyn said slowly.

"And where is Ollie?"

Jocelyn Was Annoyed.

"In there." Jocelyn walked on, leading the way. She resented Rita's attitude, her tone. So unfair. After all, she had only been trying to help them both out of a nasty scandal.

Rita hung back, her delicate nostrils quivering. "I should be interested to know why Ollie felt he could call upon you this way," she said coldly. "And only a few hours ago I left you broken-hearted in your room."

"I try never to fail my friends," Jocelyn returned as coldly. "You'll find Ollie in rather bad shape. I wouldn't be too hard on him, if I were you." She drew herself up to her full height, allowing Rita to step past her.

"I believe I can deal with my husband," Rita drawled.

Ollie had heard the voices and knew what he was in for. He had managed to get on his feet, swaying but sobered. He stood, fumbling with fingers that wouldn't obey, to straighten his collar and tie.

"'Lo," he said with a forlorn attempt at jauntiness. "Wha' d'you come for?"

"Some odious person telephoned me."

"Carrie——" Ollie lurched forward. "Tryin' to make me sign checks. Tryin' to make me——"

"Checks? What checks?" Rita asked menacingly.

Leaving at Once.

"Stop, Ollie!" Jocelyn sharply ordered, and she turned to Rita. "I think the quicker we forget this, the better," she said. "It's all extremely unpleasant, and the Franks woman would be only too delighted if she found us quarreling in her bedroom. I'm glad I got here in time to prevent—that sort of thing." And she pointed to the scrawled, blotted checks on the writing table and floor.

There was a look in Jocelyn's fine eyes that warned Rita to go no farther. "I see I have every reason to be grateful to you, Lynn." Her lips moved, scarlet in her small white face.

"I have a taxi outside. I thought it wiser not to bring the car. Come on, Ollie." Sweetness back in her low voice. She was thinking quickly. She couldn't quarrel with Jocelyn now. But something would have to be done to cure Ollie of any possible, more dangerous infatuation. Jocelyn was becoming a menace. If Temple wouldn't marry Jocelyn, then she would simply have to be sacrificed.

A Visit From Temple.

Ogden Temple stood huge and wintry in Oliver Keene's salon at the Hotel Georges V. He dwarfed the luxurious room that looked out over its terrace to Paris, shimmering under the first July heat.

"You say she won't see me?" He massed himself before Rita Keene, the imperious blue of his eyes striking out at her.

"Mr. Temple, I've done everything I can. Used every argument. I think Jocelyn's quite mad." For once Rita spoke earnestly, without a trace of languor in her small exotic face that flowered so whitely from the shining black peak of her hair.

Suddenly Jocelyn stood in the doorway in a white gown. Light slanted on the chestnut wings of her hair. Her eyes looked larger, darker in the steady white of her young face.

Temple strode across the room. "Why have you kept away from me?"

"You know why. I didn't want Rita to see you, either. That's why I came in. To tell you both it's no use."

Temple Was Dismissed.

But as Rita started to slip out, she caught her by the arm. "No, don't go. All I've got to say is this—I wrote Dick this morning telling the truth about where I was—and why—the night before he sailed—he won't forgive me, but I'll never divorce him—unless he wishes to marry again." The room was very quiet, so that sounds from Paris seemed tossed up to splash on the terrace in a pool of sun. "I also sent him back the remaining half of the pearl necklace I had meant to replace with your money." Joycelyn's voice quivered. In doing that, she had indeed given Dick over to Mary Derby, if he wanted to go. The debt was his now, to pay as he chose.

"Jocelyn!" was wrung out of Temple.

"I can't help it," Jocelyn said. She flung her arms out to fall limply at her sides.

"But you have no husband. He left you," Temple thundered. "I'm offering you all I have."

Jocelyn went rigid. "I don't want anything you can offer. I'm beginning to think," she said scornfully, "that you're nothing but a sort of amateur power showing off—pretending to yourself that you were everything and everyone. You might have been a great sculptor. You're not. You may be a great lover—not for me. Now will you go?"

He fell back from her, drawn to his great height. You will not be annoyed again," he said and stalked from the room.

"You little fool—you unutterable little fool!" Rita found her voice.

Parks Planning Group to Meet

Unification Discussion Set Here for Friday; 50 Are Invited.

The informal committee which met Tuesday for the first time to consider alternative plans for unification of recreational facilities will reassemble next Friday to discuss the program further.

Invitations to the meeting are being sent out today by Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which sponsored the recreation survey on which the report is based. About 50 representative officials and private citizens are expected to attend.

Thomas S. Settle, secretary of the planning body, explained yesterday that the commission is attempting to gain adoption of whichever unification plan is most acceptable to the greatest number.

"The commission's interest lies in laying all possibilities of recreation system reorganization before the public and letting them decide," Settle said. "That is why these meetings are being held."

L. H. Weir, who presented the National Recreation Association report Tuesday, will participate in the discussions at next week's meeting. He conducted the survey, which was made under funds allotted by the planning commission.

Smith Lists Main Defect In Education

Peery, Miss Holt and Miss Phillips Also on Program.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 30 (AP).—Dr. Henry Lester Smith, president of the National Education Association, in an address for the Virginia association tonight said one general defect of educafion is a growing tendency to use it in "furthering the present blind purposes of the state" instead of in providing vision for the state.

He cited Russia, Germany and Italy as "examples of this limitation in education."

The teachers' national president asserted the teaching of the theory and practice of morals is a means of improving the American Education Association.

Final Session Program.

Dr. Smith was on the final program of the annual convention of the Virginia Education Association in progress here all this week. With him on the program were Gov. Peery and Lena Madesin Phillips, international president of the Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

In today's sessions the State association went on record as favoring Federal aid for public schools, an increase in the appropriation of State funds for teachers' salaries, free textbooks supplied on a State-wide basis, and passage of a sound retirement law.

The delegates adopted resolutions urging the general assembly to increase the annual appropriation for teachers' salaries from $463 to $630 per teacher.

Teacher Requirements.

The association advocated efficiency rather than marital status, local residence, or political influence as the determining factor in the employment of teachers, in another resolution.

The association further recommended that the State board of education discontinue the practice of issuing collegiate certificates to beginning teachers and require a collegiate professional diploma as the minimum license for high school teachers.

Miss Lucy Mason Holt, of Norfolk, president of the association, demanded that every public school teacher in Virginia vote, in her annual address before the convention.

"We owe our support to those candidates who support education," she said. "Teachers are citizens—does a citizen explain his interest in civic affairs?"

Duty to Ballot.

"It shall be the duty of every teacher to register and vote at all elections," she said. "To be informed as to the platforms of candidates for office—local, State and national," is another duty, she added.

She expressed appreciation for the work of members and officers of the association, and to Dr. Sidney B. Hall, State superintendent of public instruction.

Referring to Gov. Peery, she said, "We may resay of him what England has said of Walter Hines Page, 'He was our friend in the hour of trouble.'

"To members of the legislature, especially Delegate Ashton Dovell," she expressed appreciation. Without the counsel of Mr. Dovell, she said, "I would have been all alone in a strange sea."

"At the last legislature we made many friends," continued Miss Holt. "We can not afford to lose a single one and must make more, for education has a long way to go. The fact that education is a State function is pretty well accepted, but much more work must be done to keep our respective localities up to their honest share of school costs. The voice of the people back home means much to a legislator, and ours is the double task of informing the patrons as well as explaining to legislators that additional funds for schools are needed."

Five Banks Mail $25,879 Savings

Strasburg Citizens Will Get $11,661 of Amount.

Woodstock, Va., Nov. 30 (Spl.).—Christmas savings checks aggregating $25,879 are being mailed this week to patrons of five of Shenandoah County's seven banks, with Strasburg citizens receiving $11,661.72 of the total amount to be distributed.

Heading the county's Christmas funds deposits is the Massanutten National Bank, of Strasburg, with $7,561.72. The Shenandoah National, at Woodstock, will distribute $6,281.86; the Farmers Bank, at Edinburg, $4,900; the First National, at Strasburg, $4,100, and the National Bank, at Woodstock, $3,036.

Following the custom at Mount Jackson, the People's Bank has no Christmas savings deposits, and the Citizens' National, at New Market, has only a small amount to distribute.

Virginia Receives Spanish Grapes In Apple Trade

Winchester, Va., Nov. 30 (Spl.).—For the first time since 1922, a consignment of Spanish Malaga grapes, famous for their fine quality, has been received in Winchester. Of interest in this section in the fact that the grapes were imported under a trade agreement with Spain which provides for exportation of apples from this country in exchange for grapes.

The grapes were banned when it was asserted they were responsible for pests invading American vineyards. In retaliation, Spain refused to buy American apples. Since the agreement, shipments of apples to Spain have been resumed.

Woman Killed Trying to Move Lighting Cord

Mrs. Hattie May Rice Dies Near Frederick; Grasped Brass Socket.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 30 (Spl.).—Grasping a brass electric light socket in an effort to remove a "drop cord," at the home of her brother, Maynard Marshall, near here yesterday, Mrs. Hattie May Rice, 40, near Mountaindale, was electrocuted, while her husband and several other persons looked on powerless to render aid.

Mrs. Rice and her husband went to the home of her brother before daylight to assist at a butchering. To provide illumination a "drop cord" was attached to electric fixtures in the summer kitchen and run a short distance outside of the house. After daylight Mrs. Rice attempted to remove the light by grasping the socket at the end of the cord. She suddenly collapsed and died before being carried into the house. No burns were visible on her hands and a physician said her damp shoes from the wet ground formed a perfect conductor for the approximately 110 volts of current which ordinarily would not be sufficient to cause serious injury.

Mrs. Rice was a daughter of Charles T. and Sarah Marshall, near Mountaindale. Besides her husband she is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Bertha I. Eaton and Mrs. Lenora I. Hartman, both of Mountaindale, and four sons, Delmus W., Ira T., Merhl H., and Garnet L. Rice, at home.

Funeral services will be held Sunday afternoon at the Lewistown Methodist Episcopal church.

Five Hurt In Crash.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 30 (Spl.).—Five men were injured, three of them seriously, in a motoring accident on the Martinsburg-Berkeley Springs State highway west of here last night, the accident being laid to a road made slippery by continued rain and the prevailing blinding fog that also was held responsible for half a dozen less serious accidents in the Eastern Panhandle.

In the crash Garland Thomas, of Charlottesville, Va., driving alone in his automobile, suffered facial lacerations and a slight brain concussion; James Harden, of Berkeley Springs, W. Va., sustained a compound fracture and probable internal injuries; and James Wash, of Berkeley Springs, scalp lacerations and a slight concussion. Two other Berkeley Springs men with Harden and Wash were not seriously hurt. The first three mentioned required hospital attention here. The cars were moving in opposite directions on a curve at the time of the accident.

Six Hurt in Accident.

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 30 (Spl.).—A series of automobile accidents caused by the slippery condition of the highways near here have resulted in serious injuries to six persons.

James Dalhouse, 10, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. G. Dalhouse, Waynesboro, suffered severe head and hip injuries when struck by an automobile driven by Joseph Moomaw, Staunton. Mr. Moomaw said he applied his brakes to avoid striking the youth, but his machine skidded on the wet road into the bicycle.

Mrs. Harry Rhodes, 70, Media, Pa., and Mrs. A. B. Magee, Waynesboro, were badly hurt about six miles east of this city when an automobile in which they were passengers, driven by Addison Magee, Waynesboro, crashed into a ditch to avoid head-on collision with a skidding machine occupied by Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Walford, Richmond. Both women were taken to the University Hospital, where Mrs. Rhodes was reported to be in critical condition.

As the result of an accident a short distance from the same spot, Mrs. R. E. Cook, West Waynesboro, and Mrs. Robert Cole, Hot Springs, are in a local hospital, the former with a broken leg and the Hot Springs woman with head injuries. B. B. Conner, of Stuarts Draft, driver of the Cook car, suffered cuts and bruises. Mrs. Cole was driving alone. State Traffic Officers R. A. Lynn and L. J. Cosby investigated each of the accidents and no charges were brought immediately.

Along the Tri-State Trail

With

C. B. Carr

Post State Editor.

Authoritative information in our hands is that those fellows along the Tri-State Trail who a week ago were singing "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo" have changed their tune considerably.

And this is the story of a Thanksgiving dinner:

The family of Willie Lewis, who lives near Winfall, Campbell County, Va., had rabbit for Thanksgiving dinner because of an automobile accident.

Willie was dispatched to a mill Wednesday for a peck of cornmeal. Returning he noticed an automobile approaching at a high rate of speed and to be safe Willie went to the railroad tracks, which parallel the State highway. As the car reached the point opposite the boy it went off the highway, down a bank, over a ditch and onto a field.

In the ditch was a briar patch and in the patch was a rabbit. The car struck the hare and broke one of its legs. When the rabbit came hopping out of the patch Willie ran after it and caught it.

The other day I received an inquiry from one of our little readers along the trail to this effect: "Just how long will it before Santa Claus arrives?"

Well, young one, you can figure out that any way you like. Suppose that, for example, we start at last midnight and figure that old Santy will arrive about 2 a. m. the morning of December 25. By the calendar, it is just 24 days until Santy arrives; by the clock it is either of three calculations: 290 hours, that doesn't seem so long; 17,400 minutes, quite a few, you'll admit; or 1,044,000 seconds and that to me, as well as you, seems a long time to wait for the old fellow.

Virginia's Capital Square

$165,000,000 Needed to Complete Primary Road System; Shirley Points Out Dollars-and-Cents Value of Good Highways.

This is the sixth of a series of articles describing the functioning of the Virginia government centered at Richmond.

By Warren A. McNeill
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

Richmond, Va., Nov. 30 (AP).—To complete the State's present primary highway system construction costs of $165,000,000 must be met, and to complete the secondary system another $250,000,000 for construction is needed, says H. G. Shirley, State highway commissioner.

This was the commissioner's response to a question as to whether the department he heads needed to continue spending at the present rate, which amounts to about 42 cents out of every dollar expended by the State.

After summarizing maintenance costs of the primary and secondary systems, the additional costs due to the attempt to provide relief work on highways and necessary allowances for city streets which are part of the highway system, obtaining rights of way and paying administrative and engineering costs, he had pointed out that the department counted on only $95,621.56 as available for allocation to primary system construction in the current year.

Primary Construction.

This figure he constrasted with $16,500,000 needed annually for primary construction alone, if the system is to be completed in ten years, and another $16,666,666 each year for secondary construction, if that system is to be completed within 15 years.

He frankly admitted that he saw no possibility of obtaining such sums or of carrying the State road program to completion within the time the department might regard as ideal.

Must all this work be done and at such cost? Mr. Shirley was asked.

His response was that the highway department is proceeding on the theory that no road should be built unless it can justify itself from an economic standpoint, although pressure constantly is being brought to bear to build roads where traffic does not promise to justify the expenditure.

Argument Presented.

"Here's the argument that is presented," he said. "Mr. Suburban has had a road built out as far as his home, and there the improvement stops. Farther out on the same road, where it is unimproved, lives Mr. Farmer, who has to fight his way through miles of mud before he can get any good out of the improved part of the road.

"Mr. Farmer points out that his gas and automobile license taxes helped to build the road to Mr. Suburban's home, but now, when Mr. Farmer wants the road built out to where he lives, Mr. Suburban, who already has his road, is hollering for lower taxes and wants construction to stop.

"He points out, too, that he (Mr. Farmer) is continuing to pay more taxes for highways that Mr. Suburban, since driving over muddy roads requires more gas, and so more tax.

"In fact, considering the additional gas and oil used, damage to tires and car, additional washings and greasings necessary and other factors of depreciation, highway engineers have estimated that it costs 2 cents a mile more to operate over unimproved roads than improved ones.

Value to Car Owners.

"If this is correct, the car owner could afford to pay a gas tax of 22 cents a gallon better than he could afford to continually drive over bad roads.

"The things you can do with those figures are almost unbelievable. Take just the 9,000 miles of roads in the Virginia primary system and say that 30,000 vehicles drive over all of them in one year—that's an average of 9,000 miles driving a year, which is not excessive for the average car owner. Now, that amounts to 270,000,000 car-miles per year and if the saving is 2 cents per car mile, the value of those roads to the persons who use them is $5,400,000 per year, or $180 per year per car owner.

"In other words, each owner could afford to pay a tax of $180 per year better than he could to drive over unimproved roads, from a purely economic standpoint. That's not taking into consideration the social aspects of the thing—the inconvenience the isolation of bad roads would cause him, the limitation on residence of those who worked in cities but wanted to live out in the country and things like that.

"It's only in hard times like we've had recently that we fully realize the advantage of having roads that will enable city workers to live conveniently out in the country where they can take care of themselves, in part at least, in periods when work is slack."

(In the seventh artcile of this series, to be published by The Post on Tuesday, Mr. Shirley tells how he views present problems of highway construction.)

Blackwell Wins Salisbury Post As School Head

Appointment Is Confirmed by State Board; Duties Start by April 1.

Baltimore, Nov. 30 (AP).—The State board of education at a special meeting here today confirmed the appointment of Jefferson D. Blackwell, State supervisor of vocational education, as the new principal of the Salisbury State Normal School.

Dr. Blackwell, who has been connected with the State department of education since 1923, has been ordered to take up his duties in Salisbury not later than April 1. Dr. Albert S. Cook, State superintendent of education, said. He will succeed Dr. William J. Holloway, resigned.

Born in Blackwell, Md.

The new normal school principal was born, oddly enough, in Blackwell, Jefferson County, Mo. He was associate professor of education at Texas A. and M. College from 1914-1917, where he taught school administration, methods of teaching, high school problems and other subjects.

Blackwell was chairman of the division of vocational education in the Texas State department of education from 1917-1920, and was regional agent for the Federal Board of Vocational Education for one summer. After three years in the Pennsylvania State department of public instruction, he came to Maryland as director of vocational education for the State.

Holds Several Degrees.

He was graduated from Missouri State Teachers College in 1910; took his B. S. degree from the University of Missouri in 1914 and his master's degree and school administration diploma from Columbia University in 1923.

He obtained his doctorate from the Johns Hopkins University in 1929.

Blackwell is a member of the Phi Delta Kappa and Alpha Zeta fraternities and was president of the National Association of State Directors of Vocational Education in 1931-32.

2 Boy Discoverers Of $11,000 in Gold Face Court Action

Baltimore, Nov. 30 (AP).—James D. Shea, Baltimore attorney said today Mrs. Anna C. Klunk, of Chicago, had engaged him to file a claim to the $11,000 gold hoard found by two boys in the cellar of an old house here.

The treasure, sacks full of old coins, was unearthed by Thomas Jones and Henry Groh last August. Judge Eugene O'Dunne will hear claimants, including the finders, in his court December 11.

Mrs. Klunk claims the money belonged to her mother, whose first husband was said to have been Capt. James P. Wilson, who once lived in the house where the gold was found.

Court Speeds Levay-Brown Vote Recount

Order Granted by Judge to Hasten Settlement of Election Tie.

Annapolis, Md., Nov., 30 (AP).—Judge William H. Forsythe, jr., signed an order in the Anne Arundel County Circuit Court today directing John J. Levay, Democrat, to show cause by December 8 why proceedings designed to break the election tie between Levay and T. Roland Brown, Republican, should not proceed.

Levay, former Mayor of Annapolis, and Brown, president of the Annapolis Water Co., each received 7,512 votes for the seventh place on the board of county commissioners.

Noah A. Hillman, attorney for Brown, filed a petition in his behalf on Tuesday, asking a recount of all ballots cast for commissioners in the general election.

The petition alleged that Brown was duly elected over Levay because of a plurality of all "lawful" ballots cast in the election. He cited alleged minor irregularities in the counting of the votes, which it was contended, would on recount result in Brown's election.

The petition was filed as a friendly action against Levay, whose attorney, George B. Woelfel, cooperated with Hillman. Woelfel said today that Levay was just as anxious as Brown to have the situation adjusted and that it was unlikely that any action would be taken to block the recount.

The county authorities are anxious to break the tie and save the county the estimated $7,000 expense of a special election.

Farmers to Purchase Drought Area Cattle

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 30 (Spl.).—Washington County farmers will purchase 294 head of cattle from the drought-stricken area of the Middle West, County Farm Agent Milton D. Moore said following a survey conducted this week.

The 9 carloads of cattle will include 260 steers, 22 dairy cows and 12 young beef bulls, and will arrive here in two weeks from Kansas City, Mo., where they are now being assembled. The cattle will be sold at the prevailing market price.

Plan to Cut Legislature Session Hit

Leaders Oppose Veasey Economy Program in Maryland.

He Seeks 60-Day Term to Save $50,000 in State Expense.

Baltimore, Nov. 30 (AP).—A proposal of State Senator Milton L. Veasey, of Worcester County, for reducing the legislative session from 90 to 60 days to save the State money today ran into objections from legislators.

Senator Veasey outlined a plan for reducing the length of the session by which he estimated $50,000 in expenses could be saved. One feature was the holding of the caucus of Democratic members of the Senate and House of Delegates about the middle of December instead of the night before the Legislature meets.

At this time a president of the Senate and a speaker of the House could be selected. They, the Worcester Senator contended, could then proceed with the naming of legislative committees, so that when the lawmakers met in January they would be able to get down to business without delay.

Melvin L. Fine, only Republican Senator elected from Baltimore City, opposed the proposal as "unsound." Fine said he did not believe $50,000 could be saved by the plan and that "this is a time of emergency, and the Legislature should not rush through its work in such a period."

A similar stand was taken by Frank J. Hirt, Democratic House member and a candidate for speaker, who said:

"While I respect the Senator's desire to save the State's money, I honestly believe that if the legislation we think will be placed before us materializes we will need the full term to give it the careful consideration it needs."

Senator Veasey said he planned to place his proposal for a mid-December legislative caucus before Joshua Warfield, of Howard County, State Democratic chairman, who will preside at the caucus.

New Screen Plays Engage Attention of Reviewers Upon Their Friday Opening

Anna Sten Has Her Best Role At Loew's Fox

'We Live Again' Fine Film; Cagney Scores at Earle; Other Programs.

"WE LIVE AGAIN," United Artists release of Samuel Goldwyn's picturization of Tolstoy's novel, "Resurrection," adapted to the screen by Maxwell Anderson, Preston Sturges and Leonard Praskins, starring Anna Sten, with Fredric March, C. Aubrey Smith, Jane Baxter, Dale Fuller, Mary Forbes, Ethel Griffies, Gwendolyn Logan, Morgan Wallace, Crauford Kent, Fritzi Ridgeway and Edgar Norton. Directed by Rouben Mamoulian. Previewed Tuesday, November 27.

By Nelson B. Bell.

A great deal of the power of Count Leo Tolstoy's novel of "Resurrection" has been preserved in this new picturization of the story of the mesalliance involving Prince Dmitri Nekhlyudov, of aristocratic Russian lineage, and Katusha Maslova, a peasant girl employed on the estate of his aunts.

The play, presented under the new title of "We Live Again," necessarily, remains a grim study in social injustice and tardy restitution. Katusha and Dmitri, despite the difference in their stations, plight their troth, each vowing eternal love to the other. Dmitri, however, joins the military and upon winning his commission abandons his ideas of revolutionary radicalism and adopts the life of his set—a stratum of society dedicating its energies to the swifter paces of careless living.

They Meet Again.

By the time Dmitri and Katusha meet again, she is a lovely young woman who surrenders to the romanticism of a beautiful moonlight night in spring. After the death of her fatherless baby, she drifts to Moscow and leads the crimson life of a woman of the pavements who may be bought and paid for indiscriminately. In time, she is arrested on a false charge and Dmitri sits on the jury which, through a colossal blunder, condemns her to exile and hard labor in the mines of Siberia.

Dmitri, finally cognizant of the part he has played in wrecking the life of his former sweetheart, bends every effort toward securing her release. Failing in this, he parcels out his estates to the peasantry, reduces himself to the proverty Katusha has known so long and crosses the border with her, a voluntary exile, to undergo the same punishment he has brought upon the girl with whom, once more, he is passionately in love.

Film Has Gay Moments.

The present production of the story is not so completely morbid as its skeletonized outline sounds. The opening sequences are gay with the blossoms and spirit of spring—gayer probably than the somber and tragic Tolstoy ever meant them to be. Then, too, there are intervals of music that are majestically impressive. Much has been made of the Easter service, where the Russian A Capella Choir sings the ritual with tremendously moving effect, and later on there are gypsy ensembles in which Nina Koshetz's splendid operatic voice is heard to great advantage.

But the picture, despite these pretentious interpolations, which are never allen or subversive to the major movement of the plot, is wholly Anna Sten's. In the closing scenes of the play, when the developments take on the tinge of tragic drama, this young Russian actress at last finds it possible to summon a degree of emotional power that her earlier work in the American cinema has not even vaguely intimated. Her performance is that of an actress of the first rank, who apparently has only needed the proper vehicle to emerge as an artiste worthy of the attention of the most discriminating audiences.

Opposite the star, Fredric March gives one of his reliable portrayals of a young man of keen intellect, sensitiveness and the courage to face a crisis when it confronts him. Jane Baxter, C. Aubrey Smith, Mary Forbes, Ethel Griffies, Gwendolyn Logan, Sam Jaffe, Fritzi Ridgeway, Dale Fuller and Morgan Wallace are only a few among the many who contribute to the high level of excellence that characterizes every aspect of this superior bit of cinematography.

"We Live Again" is a subject of great pictorial beauty that has been artistically photographed by Gredd Toland and faultlessly directed by Rouben Mamoulian.

Stage Bill Is Excellent.

The stage portion of the bill is headlined by Ferde Grofe, celebrated composer and long arranger for Paul Whiteman, and his 11-piece orchestra, assisted by Betty Barthelle, songstress whom the audience would not let get through yesterday afternoon, and the Randall International Trio, two graceful girls and a man, who dance with rare skill. Mr. Grofe's most notable offerings were two of his own compositions—the "On the Trail" movement from his "Grand Canyon Suite," and the "Mardi Gras" movement from his "Mississippi Suite," the latter conducted from the pit and played by the combined house and stage orchestras with rousing effect. Grofe has imbued his men with a sense of precision and delicacy of tone that sets them apart from all the other stage bands that have played Washington in such profusion this season.

The vaudeville bill is opened by Grace Dufaye, a contortionistic dancer of amazing suppleness of body, assisted by Eddie Stuart, who does a unique piano dance, and Dot, Don and Teddy, three young women who are equally proficient as precision and solo dancers. The Funnyboners, radio's comic trio, are next with a nice line of songs and patter, and Joe Phillips and Madeline Kilsen, aided by an unnamed brunette, fill the No. 3 spot with a vast amount of nonsense.

The Fox Movietone News, interpreted by Lowell Thomas, and Prof. Lampkin's medley "Love" overture complete a bill that deserves the capacity patronage it was enjoying yesterday.

Plans Road Tour With Orchestra

Eddie Peabody, noted instrumentalist, headlining at the Earle Theater this week, is shown with Mrs. J. T. H. Mitchell, socially prominent New Yorker, who has collaborated with him in the composition of several new numbers that will be heard for the first time at the National Press Club's barn dance tonight. After his week at the Earle, Mr. Peabody will go on tour with his new 15-piece orchestra and a trio of vocalists, abandoning his 10-year custom of appearing as a "single" act.

"THE ST. LOUIS KID," Warner Bros. picturization of "A Perfect Week-End," by Frederick Hazlitt Brennan, starring James Cagney, with Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins and Hobart Cavanaugh. Directed by Ray Enright. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Ever since it was discovered, in "He Was Her Man," that he could depict roles other than those of a tough lower East Sider, James Cagney has been the beneficiary of a remarkable improvement in the quality of the stories he has been called upon to enact. It was true in "Here Comes the Navy," and is truer yet in "The Saint Louis Kid," his current vehicle.

In these latter works, however, those attributes with which the name of Cagney has become associated in the public mind have not been entirely forgotten, for here is a "typical" Cagney picture, one that permits him to be a humanly tough egg, but at the same time offers him the chance to depict with greater depth of feeling the role of a city-bred man who sees a brilliant future on the farm.

Based on "Milk War."

Basing the plot upon the events of last spring's "milk war" in the Middle West, there is unfolded a continuously engrossing story of a truck driver whose explosive pugnacity is constantly getting him into trouble. Comes the embattled farmers' retaliation for the paltry remuneration offered the dairymen and enter the gangster-drivers to supplant the regular operators of the route.

A murder ensues, and how Cagney ferrets out the murderer, brings peace to the warring factions, and wins the girl of his dreams makes for as fascinating a story as the star had had.

As must be apparent, this is a typical Cagney story. Yet, it is played by a restrained Cagney who seems to take particular pride in depicting not so much the pugnacious braggart as the thoughtful self-reared son of the city.

Allen Jenkins Scores.

No less commendable a part is handled by Allen Jenkins, as Mr. Cagney's bail-raising pal. And Patricia Ellis does a nice piece of work in furnishing the other half of the love interest. Others in the well-chosen cast include Robert Barrat, Spencer Charters, William Davidson, Dorothy Dare, Hobart Cavanaugh and Addison Richards.

The stage portion of the bill—prefaced by C. Frederick Clark's medley of popular pieces, in which Bert Granoff sings "Stars Fell on Alabama" and "Out in the Cold Again"—is quite the equal of the screen feature in sheer entertainment. The Harris Twins and Loretta open the bill with acrobatics, performed with quiet dignity and artistry.

Mr. Peabody Gets Ovation.

Although this act is worthy of ace billing—as is also that of Harry Kahne, who does more caligraphic things simultaneously with chalk and blackboard than a half dozen ordinary people separately—that honor is awarded Eddie Peabody, that extraordinary virtuoso of the banjo and other stringed instruments, fretted and not. To be fully appreciated Mr. Peabody must be seen, for seldom does an actor work so hard and so thoroughly sell himself as this ebullient instrumentalist and all to a tumultuous ovation.

The fourth act is by Harry Burns, Italian dialectician, assisted by Virginia Sully, Helen Lockwood and Tony De Luca. The act is, as such acts go, above the ordinary.

With Miss Audrey Seiber to introduce the several acts and Paramount News to furnish the current events, a highly acceptable and seasonable program is presented.

"OUR DAILY BREAD," Viking Production's picturization of a story by King Vidor, featuring Karen Morley, Tom Keene, John T. Qualen and Addison Richards. Directed by King Vidor. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

As close to all of us as the newspaper headlines which inspired it, and as close in reality to many families as tomorrow, if not today, this story of stranded men and women who band together to exchange help and service is at times moving and exciting, and always is interesting.

The average man and woman are important to King Vidor. In "The Crowd," he chronicled in very much the same manner what the beginning of the depression meant to them. Perhaps this going back to the land is his plan, as it is an important part of the Federal Government's, for ending the depression. (Already the Emergency Relief Administration has aided more than 80,000 farm families to "rehabilitate" themselves on the land and the Public Works Administration is building homesteads for other stranded men and women.)

A Human Drama.

Vidor keeps his average people average. And what he may lose in drama, he gains in humanness and understanding. The greatest assets of "Our Daily Bread" are its simplicity and directness. It doesn't try to be an epic and isn't. It is just a story of men and women who made places for themselves when there were no places for them.

A blonde siren creeps distressingly into "Our Daily Bread" just as absurd happy ending did in "The Crowd"—Vidor's doffed cap to Hollywood perhaps. But the blonde who might be snipped neatly out without disturbing a thing, and a little too much hokum here and commonplaceness there, are not enough to destroy an earnest and honest picture, important for its social implications.

And if they may sound too formidable, may we add that there is humor, several rather fine camera shots, and a climax, made up of the fury and enthusiasm of the farmers trying desperately to get water to their drought-stricken crops, the rhythm of their bodies and their flying picks, and the gushing black water hurrying down to flood the corn fields, that is as exciting as anything we've seen.

Ability vs. "Names."

Except for Karen Morley, who is both lovely and splendid as the wife of the community's leader, Vidor has no "names" in his cast. He has what is considerably better—sincerity and realism. Tom Keene, seen heretofore in Westerns only, is excellent as the young leader, who almost runs away from his big job. John T. Qualen, as Chris, and Addison Richards add a great deal. No one acts except the blonde, who, being a sort of combination Mae West and Sadie Thompson, is quite lost on a subsistence homestead.

The subsidiaries include a travelogue to Mandalay, with the dawn coming up like thunder again and again in the musical accompaniment; an idiotic but sometimes amusing musical comedy short, "Nifty Nurses" which is intended, we're afraid, to be a little like "Men in White" caught in a distorted mirror, and a newsreel which mentions Rex Tugwell but doesn't show anything except his hat brim—Darn!

"THE PAINTED VEIL," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the story by W. Somerset Maugham, adapted to the screen by John Meehan, Salka Viertel and Edith Fitzgerald, starring Greta Garbo, with Herbert Marshall and George Brent, supported by Warner Oland, Jean Hersholt, Katherine Alexander, Beulah Bondi and Forrester Harvey. Directed by Richard Boleslavsky.

Occupying the eminence she does among motion picture stars, it was, of course, inevitable that Greta Garbo should continue a second week in W. Somerset Maugham's "The Painted Veil"—as translated to the screen by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—at Loew's Palace Theater.

The picture follows somewhat the contour of "Arrowsmith," without that admirable film's high purpose and thoroughgoing integrity. Whatever "The Painted Veil" may lack in exalted aim, however, is more than made up for by the extraordinary facility revealed by Garbo in her performance in the stellar role of the wife, who failed to perceive the worthiness of her husband until she had almost lost him through a wild infatuation with a gay young embassy attache in the heart of China.

Displays Rare Versatility.

Garbo in this subject calls into play a fine versatility and offers perhaps the most completely human portrayal she has ever brought to the screen. She is splendidly supported by Herbert Marshall, as the scientist fighting an epidemic of cholera in the interior of China, and George Brent, as the embassy secretary. The best comedy bit in the picture is expertly executed by Forrester Harvey.

Other helpful chores are performed skillfully by Warner Oland, Beulah Bondi, Jean Hersholt and Katherine Alexander. In certain of its scenes, "The Painted Veil" takes on something of the grandeur of imposing spectacle.

Suit Charges Harding Heirs With 'Coercion'

Purchasers of President's Newspaper Fighting Deficiency Tax.

(Associated Press.)

A claim that they were coerced under threat of legal action into paying $133,000 to the estate of Warren G. Harding is contained in a suit filed with the Board of Tax Appeals by Louis H. Brush and Roy D. Moore, purchasers of the former President's Ohio newspaper, the Marion Star.

The suit also disclosed that terms of the sale provided Harding was to be employed for $13,300 a year as associate editor to write editorials and articles to be syndicated. Presumably, this was to start when Harding left the White House, where he received $75,000 a year.

The contract was dated June 18, 1923. Harding died August 2, 1923.

Paid for Ten Years.

Brush and Moore claimed they paid the estate $13,300 per year for ten years following his death. They charged the Bureau of Internal Revenue erroneously assessed them a deficiency totaling $3,350 for 1930 and 1931.

The petition said Brush and Moore considered that no further liability rested upon them since President Harding died before the formation of an employment contract.

"This view was not accepted by Mrs. Harding, the President's brother and sister, Charles D. Chaffner, executor of Harding's estate, nor by Hoke Donithen and Richard Crissinger, who were attorneys for the Harding family and estate. * * *

Threatened Suit.

"When the parties failed to agree on this matter, the Hardings threatened suit against the Harding Publishing Co. to compel this payment of $13,300 per year and the guarantee therefor.

"The principal asset of the Harding Publishing Co. at the time of said purchase was its circulation and good will, which were then valued at $290,000 out of total assets of about $520,000. * * *

"To avoid the danger to its circulation and good will from this threatened suit, the Harding Publishing Co., by its new owners, agreed to a settlement of the claim made by the Harding family and their representatives.

"Under this settlement the Harding Publishing Co. agreed, for the 10-year period, to pay the $13,300 annually to Mrs. Harding during her life, and after her death to the President's brother and sisters."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Friday Morning Music Club in Barker Hall. Choral program by Tuesday Evening Music Club, Florence Howard, director. Assistant artists: George Wargo, viola; Emerson Meyers, piano.

Sound training in phrasing and dynamics, in rhythmic accuracy and pliancy, shows in the singing of this small group. Closer attention to clarity of diction and steadiness of tone production will enhance its efficacy. Its pleasurable qualities in yesterday's well-chosen program merited the applause of an interested audience.

Mozart's familiar "Alleluia," so frequently turned to the ambitious uses of soprano soloists, fell delightfully on the ears in its choral form, devotional music fresh and pure in essence. Enjoyable, too, was the novelty of the plaintive chorus from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas," and the "Staendchen" of Richard Strauss assumed a piquant guise with the harmonic colors transferred to the voices.

The group of three songs by contemporary American composers contained both naivete and sophistication, the former emanating from Annabel Morris Buchanan's fine and sensitive treatment of the Virginia folksong, "Brother Green," and in the choral arrangement of "The Nightingale," that quaint ballad collected by Howard Brockway in Kentucky. The touch of the age of jazz came in Aaron Copland's "An Immorality," in which verses by Ezra Pound are stretched on the rack of syncopation with humorous effect.

The closing group foreran the Yuletide season by offering Dickinson's "The Shepherd's Story," Kurt Schindler's arrangement of the fifteenth century Catalan carol, "The Birds Praise the Advent of the Savior;" Theophil Wendt's "I Saw a Fair Maiden" and Louis Victor Saar's arrangement of the "Twelve Days of Christmas," brimming with lightsome merriment.

George Wargo and Emerson Meyers contributed, in two installments, the G minor sonata of Grieg, which they read with poetic intent. The veiled quality of the viola tone accords with the melancholy tinge of this music, which one usually hears in the thinner voice of the violin.

A PROBLEM THAT HAS NEVER BEEN SOLVED! HOW LONG IS THE CIRCUMFERENCE OF A CIRCLE WITH A ONE-INCH DIAMETER?

Ask any school boy how to find the length of the circumference of a circle and he will tell you to multiply the diameter by pi, which is correct except that nobody has ever been able to find out the value of pi.

Approximations are used in all engineering and mathematical work. For simple problems 3 1-7 is near enough, more generally a value of 3.1416 is used and in cases where greater accuracy is required the value of pi is considered 3.14159. Even then it is not accurate and no investigator has ever found the exact value. Therefore, the seemingly simple problem of finding the circumference of a one-inch circle is still unsolved and, so far as we know, it is one that can not be solved. The value of pi, which is the ratio of the circumference to the diameter, was carried out to 707 places by Shanks in 1873—and still it did not come out even!

This gap in mathematical knowledge is no hindrance, however, to engineering or science, because if the value of pi is carried out to only 10 places the error is so minute that the finest tool can not detect it. For example, if the value of pi is taken as 3.1415926535 and used to determine the circumference of a circle 200 feet across the error will be less than one millionth of an inch.

For centuries man has investigated the relation of the circumference to the diameter. Earliest data shows that three times the diameter was once considered correct for the circumference.

By Stuart Cameron.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30 (U.P.).—With the Midshipmen holding their brightest chance of victory in more than a decade, football forces of the Army and Navy gathered today for the annual service contest.

This is the one big extravaganza of the 1934 football season and it will attract a crowd of 78,000 to historic Franklin Field tomorrow. The crowd would be twice as large if there were seats enough. The game was overscribed by 20,000 fully two weeks ago, and uncounted thousands of additional requests have been turned back since that time.

Even rains on Thanksgiving Day and today, along with predictions of occasional showers tomorrow have failed to dim interest in the game, although wet weather would take some of the glitter from the show.

Won Last in 1921.

But even a deluge would take nothing from the majesty of the Naval Academy Band as it roars under Franklin Field's archway, blasting out the Midshipmen's "March Navy Down the Field, Anchors Aweigh." Nor would dampness chill the attack or stubbornness of defense prepared by Cadets and Midshipmen.

Never since Navy scored its last series victory, 7 to 0, in 1921 have Annapolis men felt so certain of victory. Down at Annapolis a fortnight ago the writer was told of month's salaries wagered with friendly enemies at West Point. And the Navy folk already have "spent" the money.

Most of this confidence is bundled up in the husky frame of a fleet, courageous and smart half back, Fred (Buzz) Borries, who has led his team to victory in all starts save one. And even in the one game Navy lost—Pittsburgh—Borries left his mark. The Pitt players to a man, and their coach, Dr. Jock Sutherland, said Borries was the best man they had faced all season. And without Borries Navy never would have upset Notre Dame, a team which was good enough to win over Army.

Army Also Confident.

Army's confidence is scarcely less pronounced. West Point folk, while unwilling to term Navy's win over Notre Dame a fluke, are frank in believing it was just "one of those things" and are anxious to counter Borries with Jack Buckler as a reason for probable victory.

Both Borries and Buckler are great passers. Of the two I regard Buzz as the better. For one thing, he is more cool under fire. Then, too, Navy's receiving is better. Army has one dependable end in Bill Shuler, but Buckler can't pass to him all afternoon.

Will Attempt Passes.

A passing game is assured. Unless all signs fail there will be little gaining at the lines or around the ends. Each team has a stout forward wall and each boasts a couple of standout linemen. Army's tops are Clifford, at center, and Stillman at guard. Navy has one great tackle in Cutter, and a great guard in Zabriskie.

Ticket speculators were doing a big business. Twenty-five dollars was minimum for a fair ticket, and some sold for as much as $50. The original price was $4.40. Rooftops near Franklin Field were being equipped with railings to guard the expected crowds. Householders planned to ask $2 and $3 for precarious views of the proceedings.

Carideo Quits Missouri Post

Teams Lost 22 Games, Won 2 in 2 Seasons.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Nov. 30 (AP).—Frank Carideo, Notre Dame's all-America quarter back of 1929 and 1930, and last of the Rockne field generals, resigned today from the University of Missouri—one of the first major victims of the open season on unfortunate football coaches.

The resignation of the young head coach, now in his mid-twenties, came close after Missouri's 20-to-0 loss to the old rival Kansas Jayhawkers, and at the climax of the most disastrous season in Missouri Tiger football history. After tying Colorado, the Tigers lost their last eight games.

Among those most frequently mentioned for Carideo's post were: Don Faurot and Emmett (Abe) Stuber, products of the brighter football days at Missouri; James Pixlee, Missouri, '13, athletic director of George Washington University; "Navy Bill" Ingram, who recently quit football to go in business; Lynn O. Waldorf, former Syracuse tackle, who drove Kansas State to victory over Nebraska and to the Big Six championship his first year up from Oklahoma A. & M., and Lowell (Red) Dawson, Minnesota back field coach.

Statesman Is Shipped.

London, Nov. 30 (AP).—Statesman, 4-year-old racehorse owned by the American sportsman, Victor Emanuel, today was shipped to the United States, to run in the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap at Los Angeles, February 23.

L. S. U., Tulane Vie in Dixie's Feature

Undefeated in Conference, Both Dispute Tide's Claims for Title.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30 (AP).—Aside from the spectacular Army-Navy football show, which dominates tomorrow's brief but noteworthy farewell to gridiron arms in most sections of the country, chief interest centers in maneuvers calculated to help settle conference championships in the South and Southwest.

Alabama's mighty Crimson Tide, the only major team that can successfully dispute Minnesota's claim to all-conquering National honors, has captured the Rose Bowl nomination but, like the Gophers, can not claim undisputed sectional laurels unless something happens to the remaining contenders.

L. S. U. Faces Tulane.

Illinois and Purdue were obligingly removed so that Minnesota could occupy the Big Ten heights, all alone, and Alabama's hopes of a clear-cut hold on the Southeastern Conference title now depend on what happens to Louisiana State and Tulane, who wage their annual scrap tomorrow at Baton Rouge.

All three Dixie aggregations are undefeated in conference competition so far, Alabama showing seven straight victories, Tulane six and L. S. U. four. The best Alabama can hope for is a tie between the Louisiana rivals, whereby both would be eliminated. They finished with a 7-7 deadlock last year, but each has different plans for tomorrow afternoon. L. S. U., which will be more interested in the performance of "Senator" Abe Mickal in the back field than what Senator Huey P. Long does in the cheering section, has been installed a favorite, but it will be no great surprise if "Monk" Simons leads Tulane to victory.

Even if Louisiana State wins, it

Impellittiere Defeated by Gallagher

Capital Heavy Is Winner Over Giant Rival in Ten Rounds.

Gallagher weighed 210¼; Impellittiere, 258.

Bob Lowery Winner.

Bob Lowery took a split decision from Mickey Landis, the punching pedagogue, in a slapbang eight-round semifinal. The grueling contest was a see-saw affair from beginning to end, with first one battler, then the other, jumping into a temporary lead.

Judge Charley Dunn voted a draw, Judge Bob Eller and Referee Sullivan awarded the contest to Lowery. The crowd apparently favored a draw decision.

Terry Beats Jacobs.

Lou Terry, of St. Louis, defeated Stumpy Jacobs, of Norfolk, in a cumbersome six-round lightweight preliminary. The boys tried hard throughout, but that's all that can be said for them.

Pete Bostwick Horse Barred

Blind Bowboy Is Ruled Out After London Race.

LONDON, Nov. 30 (AP).—Unsatisfactory performances by three horses and their jockeys, including George H. (Pete) Bostwick's Blind Bowboy, in the Berkshire Handicap hurdle race today resulted in the suspension of the jockeys and fines for the trainers of the horses.

Ivor Anthony, trainer of the American-owned steeplechaser, was fined $250, as were Frank Hartigan and Own Anthony. Jockeys D. Morgan, who had the leg up on Blind Bowboy; G. Wilson, who won the last Grand National with Golden Miller, and J. Hamey were suspended for the duration of the meeting.

Ivor Anthony professed to be puzzled over the action of the stewards. "Blind Bowboy was running for the first time since he arrived in England," Anthony explained. "He is a stallion and inclined to be wild. I warned the starter the horse probably would cause trouble, which he did. He began to tire a half mile from home. When I asked the stewards what I had done to warrant the fine, the reply was that I shouldn't have run the horse."

Definite charges probably will be filed by the stewards within the next few days.

Fullen Stops Jadick.

Southerners To Make 4th Invasion

'Move Only Possible One Under Circumstances' Despite Pressure.

Tide Yet to Be Beaten in West; Tied Indians, 7 to 7, in 1927.

PASADENA, Calif., Nov. 30 (AP). Alabama, to the amazement of scarcely any one, was picked today to oppose Stanford in the twentieth annual Rose tournament football game here New Year's Day.

While the football world, with few exceptions, felt certain that the Crimson Tide would roll again in the Rose Bowl, it had to await the arrival of Alfred Masters, Stanford's graduate manager, today before its choice could be confirmed.

Masters spoke his magic words almost before he had stepped off the train.

"I'm happy to say it is Alabama," said the Palo Alto plenipotentiary, making it official.

Plenty of Pressure.

"Plenty of pressure was brought to bear from other sections of the country," he said, "but there was only one possible move under the circumstances. I talked with Alabama representatives before I left last night, offering them a definite invitation, which was promptly accepted.

"Because of the Western Conference post season ban we did not approach Minnesota, Big Ten champion, knowing an invitation would cause all concerned much embarrassment.

"We were informed that Alabama has one of the greatest teams in the history of the South, and with that information we could make no other selection."

Four Bid to Bowl.

The selection of Coach Frank Thomas' team means that Alabama will make its fourth Rose Bowl appearance in less than ten years, with its record here still unspoiled by defeat. The invaders were tied in 1927 by Stanford. Victories over Washington and Washington State marked the other trips.

At Palo Alto, Coach Claude E. (Tiny) Thornhill, of Stanford, started the psychological campaign designed to aid the cause of the powerful Pacific Coast champions.

"Those babies," said Tiny, "fight the Civil War all over again every time they meet a team outside their own conference.

Very Strong Team.

"Coach Thomas has a very strong team, with players three deep for every position. This boy Howell is a good kicker and passer and is entitled to the recognition given him.

"As coach at Centre I played in the South and know how touchy these Southern teams can be. I think Stanford, in picking Alabama, has the real class of the Nation."

Coach Thornhill undoubtedly remembered as he spoke how a vastly underrated Columbia eleven came out of the East a year ago to beat Stanford, 7 to 0.

The Indians have enjoyed little success in their Rose tournament assignments. Back in 1925 the Notre Dame Horsemen rode over them, 27 to 10. Two years later Alabama and Stanford played their 7-to-7 tie, but in 1928 Palo Alto won a 7-to-6 victory over Pittsburgh.

Better Defensive Record.

On the basis of scores, Stanford has a defensive record superior to Alabama's with only two touchdowns scored against it in ten defeatless games. One of these, however, by Santa Clara, cost it a tie. Five touchdowns were chalked up against the Tide, which rolled up in nine victories 287 points for a superior offensive rating. The Indians could amass but 211 points, playing one more game.

Alabama was selected despite facts that point to a definite superiority of Southern teams over the West in Rose Bowl encounters. The Pacific representatives have won only one of five games with the South.

Army-Navy Tilt to Bare Hint Of Future Defense of Nation

By Paul Gallico.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 30.—Army-Navy game. Eleven kids against 11 others. Bands, crowds, spectacles, chevrons and gold lace, brass hats, officials, politicians and dignitaries and, still, just a football game. But of all the thousands of football games played all over the country from October to December this is the one game that really matters, the only one that at some later day, many years hence, might still exert its influence in some way that might affect the millions of people who inhabit this country. To me this adds spine-chilling thrills to this annual encounter. I look forward to it as I do to few others.

The Army-Navy game is the yearly parade of the future commanders of the armed defenders of the United States. This is serious business. Watch these boys play. Watch them think. Watch their moves. Our lives one day may be in their hands.

Are Future Greats.

As the lives of all of us are reckoned, football games are written on water—a few hours' entertainment, a story in a newspaper, a few minutes of idle gossip and Monday morning quarter backing. A lot of the youngsters who play football are profoundly impressed by the game, often to their own detriment, but that hardly affects us. But these players on the field in Philadelphia tomorrow, some day will be in charge of our line of defense, at sea, or land, in the air. These are their habit-forming years. The lessons learned, the habits formed, the friendships made, every element that goes in their making as soldiers and gentlemen may some day be our concern.

To begin with, these 22 boys who face one another on Franklin Field tomorrow are successful boys. They have achieved a goal. With intelligence, self-denial, courage and fine bodies they have won the right to represent the services of the United States. They are fine physical speciments or they could not play the game.

They are not brainless, physical hulks or they wouldn't be in either

Wolverines, Merricks Meet in Deciding Game

The deciding game in the second-half race for the championship of the Columbian Football League will be played tomorrow when the two chief contenders, the Wolverine A. C. and the Merrick Boys Club meet on the Fairlawn grounds, field No. 1, at 11 a. m.

The Wolverines, champions of the first half, will win the second-half title if they beat the Merricks, while a Merrick victory would throw the leadership into a three-way tie among the Wolverines, Merricks and Northeast Tigers.

I don't believe there's Freuds and Adlers at THE PALAIS ROYAL, but there are keen gift psychologists. They've gathered together a collection of pajamas that make you a nocturnal emperor . . . pajamas cut like English lounge suits . . . tinted in gold and blue, and canary and scarlet . . . in silks and broadcloths. If you are lucky enough to get a set as a gift you'll find your head lifted, and your chest raising in regal fashion. You'll experience a feeling of majesty seeping through your veins. Banzai! There's Grounds for Recognizing Manchukuo!

And there's no telling what you will do if you step into the new silk and broadcloth Mandarin pajamas, the model of which was inspired by Henry Pu Yi's ceremonial robe. The collar buttons high, the sash is gayly fringed and the contrasting trousers and jacket are pleasantly done in a variety of two-color effects. There's plenty of Oriental spirit in these and so you may become inspired to stick your tongue out at your mother-in-law. However, this is a peaceful column and we do not recommend such activities.

The Old Smoking Jacket Ain't What It Used to Be

It's become sophisticated at THE PALAIS ROYAL, and much in demand by the boys who like to put their important drinking on a ceremonial basis. Hence the host coat or "gin coat." These are done in smooth flannels with good-looking checked or plaided contrasting collars (shawl collar, of course, like your smart dinner jacket). They can be worn in mixed company and are guaranteed to impart an exalted feeling on less than three cocktails.

Robes that steal a bi-swing back from a polo coat, robes that came from a Chinese emperor, robes made of the silk of your favorite tie . . . all smart, all practical (down to the lowly terry cloth . . . for a (k)night of the bath, and all equally useful for reading a book or showing a new collection of etchings (I think you're way ahead of me).

Charles Town Track Will Open 13-Day Meeting Today; 7 Races on Program

Course Is Put In Its Best Condition

The Panhandle, $500 Purse, Will Feature Opening Card.

By Walter Haight.

THE race horses go to the mountains today, but not for a vacation. For the next 13 days, Sundays excepted, the sporty Charles Town, W. Va., track will be the scene of seven races each afternoon, starting at 1:45 o'clock. Despite a series of legal barriers that threatened to throw the course into a state of coma for the two weeks, the Charles Town Jockey Club is now ready for action. The horses are on the scene, the jockeys are there, the mutuel plant is primed for the rustle of the bills and the clink of the coins, the bugler has been practicing the call to colors and the judges are ready to climb the stairs of the pagoda. All needed is the customers and the age-old cry of "They're off!"

The entries that clicked across the country late yesterday afternoon reveal a rather good grade of horseflesh. There is the usual sprinkling of half-mile talent, but, on the whole, the Charles Town entries have what the horsemen call "a smack of class." Racing Secretary Pat C. Galligher has distributed the weights so as to get the most competition out of the fields offered him.

Sprint Races Dominate.

As usual at the 6-furlong track, sprint races dominate the program although two events of a mile and a sixteenth occupy the sixth and seventh positions on the program. The day's feature is the Panhandle, an allowance contest, over the 7-furlong route for a purse of $500. The dash has drawn a dozen 3-year-olds and upward horses. The chief weight carriers of the field are Grand Rock, 115, and Wise Count and Scotch Soldier, each with 114. Immune and Campagna get in with a 100-pound feather. All of these horses saw action during the Bowie meeting, which ended Thanksgiving Day.

A heavy, muddy track is assured. The rains of the past few days soaked the track and attempts to work it have served only to turn over the mud. However, the course is much improved over its condition when racing first came to this section a year ago.

Charles Town obtained its racing permit yesterday after the Jockey Club posted a bond of $15,000 required by Racing Commissioner J. B. McLaughlin. This action ended a controversy which had taken the case to the Kanawha Circuit Court and the West Virginia Supreme Court.

Expect to Show Profit.

Given moderate weather, Albert J. Boyle, the new president, and his associates expect to make this meeting profitable. Charles Town lost a sizable sum in December, 1933, but showed a small profit during the summer session which followed.

Washingtonians traveling to the track by auto have their choices of two routes: Through Virginia, via Leesburg or through Maryland, via Frederick. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is running its usual special train to the track, leaving Union Station at 11:30 a. m.

Jockey Silvo Coucci, whose earnest riding made him thousands of friends in Maryland this fall, is resting at his home in Brooklyn and will leave for California next week, where he will ride during the winter.

Although official figures will not be announced until late this month, it is apparent that Bowie fared better financially than any of the Maryland tracks. Needing a $230,000 daily average for "handle" in the mutuel machines to break even, Bowie surpassed that figure by a wide margin. The balmy weather served to keep the attendance high throughout the session and the Thanksgiving Day "play" of more than $400,000, was the best of the Maryland season.

Governor-elect Harry W. Nice, of Maryland, will consider the State tax on racing, he told newspaper men at Miami yesterday. He is quoted as saying, "I do feel that if it (racing) is to be continued in Maryland, it should not be taxed to the point of destruction. The high levy on the sport has long been a source of complaint of the track operators. Nice, who is not a turf fan, has promised to make a complete study of racing in Maryland and if the State tax is reduced State officials expect the "take," or deduction from the mutuel play on each race, will be reduced.

District Tennis Rankings, Long Overdue, Providing Capital Fans Mystery

Annual Fete Of Netmen Canceled

No Committee Named to Submit List of 1934 Ratings.

By John R. Vosburgh.

THE big mystery of the hour so far as Washington tennis followers are concerned is: where, oh where, are the 1934 District tennis rankings?

Not only are they nearly a month overdue but chances of their being made inside another month are about as slim as current signs of spring—what with the Washington Tennis Association having apparently gone into a state of complete hibernation.

Winfree Johnson, honorary president of the association, has already announced there will be no annual tennis banquet this year. Unless the players themselves move toward holding it, there probably will be none. Annually held early in November, the banquet has long been a feature of the local tennis year.

No Committee Named.

But the delay in the announcement of the rankings is causing more consternation than the omission of the banquet. No steps have been taken toward making the rankings and there is not indication that President Louis I. Doyle, of the association, intends to take any in the immediate future. No committee as yet has been appointed.

Of course, the No. 1 position is undeniably the property of Barney Welsh, the Rockville siege gun, but from that point on down the rankings are as uncertain as the next day's weather.

Tony Latona, the former Georgetown basket ball star, holds a shade over Dooley Mitchell, one-time perennial champ, for the runner-up berth, but the official solution of all such controversial questions rests with the committee, if and when one is appointed.

The last meeting of the association was in April, 1933, although the 1933 ranking committee met last fall.

Whether last year's committee is to be reappointed, allowing it to go ahead and make the rankings, is up to President Doyle. Members of the committee in 1933 were Addison Grant, Gray Gable, Bill Shreve, Pat Deck and Joe Rutley.

In the meantime, tennis fans are waxing restless over the absence of the rankings and players over the loss of their banquet.

80,000 to See Army Battle Navy Today

sides of the field. Also among the military contingent from the Capital will be Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff.

Postmaster General Farley also has made reservations, as have Senators and Representatives by the score.

Despite the rain, the Franklin Field gridiron is expected to be comparatively dry, tarpaulins having covered the playing field since midweek. The weather man, however, held out little prospect of brightening skies tomorrow. Light rains throughout the day were forecast.

Navy 8-to-5 Favorite.

Special trains will deposit the fans from all sectors at the very doors of the stadium before noon. The regiments of Cadets and Midshipmen will take the field at 12:30 o'clock for their pregame maneuvers,, always an inspiring foretaste of the battle that will follow.

Betting commissioners tonight were quoting the Navy as an 8-to-5 favorite in view of the Midshipmen's impressive record and the presence of the redoubtable "Buzz" Borries in their back field. But hard-bitten football fans who know the service teams' penchant for rising to new heights in the midst of their traditional battle conceded Navy only a slight edge, if any.

Pitted against Borries will be the Army's own back-field star, Texas Jack Buckler, who has run amuck against Navy teams during the last two seasons. Equally as versatile as Borries except for the latter's round semifinal. Theg rueling con-Buckler will have the support of a heavier line and another talented back-field mate in Capt. Joe Stancock.

The two youthful coaches, Lieut. Tom Hamilton, of Navy, and Lieut. Gar Davidson, of Army, would comment only that their teams are "ready," but both are known to hold high hopes of victory.

Navy to Take to Air.

Navy is prepared to make its supreme bid for victory through the air lanes with Borries tossing his varied assortment of passes to his ends and back field mates. On the receiving end of Navy's best passes this season has been Half Back Tom King, who caught two consecutive tosses from Borries to score against Pittsburgh, but Bill Clark and Bob Mandelkorn also are adept receivers.

Bulking large in the offensive plans of the Middies also is the talented toe of big Slade Cutter, the tackle who is the intercollegiate heavyweight boxing champion. Place kicks by Cutter gave Navy winning margins over Maryland and Notre Dame and if three points have a bearing on the game, Cutter doubtless will be sent into action if the Middies are within kicking range.

Army stock declined last Saturday when the West Pointers lost a 12-6 decision to Notre Dame, a team that Navy has beaten, 10-6. The games of the two service rivals against the Irish provide the only direct means of comparison. Navy rested on an open date, while West Point was playing Notre Dame, and the degree in which the Cadets recover from that hard battle is expected to have a bearing on today's result.

Palace Eleven Seeks Title Tomorrow

PERRENIAL champions of the District's 150-pound grid teams, the Palace eleven makes its first bid for unlimited honors tomorrow at Seat Pleasant, where it meets the Maryland Athletic Club at 2:15.

Palace won the first half, upsetting Maryland, 13 to 7, on its way to the title, and winning over all other opponents. But it will be a stronger Maryland team that takes the field tomorrow.

Manager Ralph Boyer has bolstered his eleven with recruits from the Mohawks and expects to place the strongest team on the field National City League fans have seen this season. Maryland must win tomorrow to clinch the second-half honors and gain the right to meet Palace in a play-off for the city championship.

Palace Has Sandlotters.

Palace, with its strictly sandlot line-up, will be the underdog but a well supported one. Southwest fans are backing their favorites to the limit, anticipating a return of the unlimited crown to that section of the city.

The Scanlon Brothers Mike, Ed and Joe, Joe Hudson and other regulars will be in the team's starting line-up.

Maryland will rely on "Snail" DeLabre, Joe Alenty, Frank Cumberland, Willis Benner and other hand-picked stars to turn back the visitors. The suburban team gave a striking illustration of what it expects to do tomorrow when it steam-rollered the Seaman Gunners into a 46-0 defeat.

A throng of several thousand fans that is expected to be numerically greater than any to witness a sandlot game since the Mohawk-Apache battle of 1928 is expected to see the teams clash.

Carnera, Campolo To Battle Tonight

Former Champion Favored in Buenos Aires Fight.

Buenos Aires, Nov. 30 (AP).—Primo Carnera and Victorio Campolo, two of the biggest men in boxing, today were reported in fit condition for their 12-round-bout tomorrow night in Independiente Football Stadium.

Carnera, former world heavyweight champion, is expected to weigh in around 260 pounds and Campolo, just as tall, but not as broad, at 222.

The odds heavily favor Carnera, who won by a knockout in their last meeting in New York. The lanky Argentine meat market proprietor has trained industriously for the fight, but he has been out of competition for two years and a recent operation for removal of his adenoids is not thought to have brought an improvement in his fighting.

Hoyas, Terrors To Battle in Baltimore

West Md. Is 2-to-1 Choice; Seven G. U. Players in Final Game.

GEORGETOWN this afternoon comes to the end of another football season—the most successful grid campaign enjoyed by the Hoyas in the last five years—meeting Western Maryland at Baltimore Stadium.

Head Coach Jack Hagerty gambled on the condition of his squad yesterday by canceling practice because of unfavorable weather conditions. Hagerty simply called the squad together, outlined the offense and went into a minute description of the defense to be used against the undefeated Terrors.

Capt. Saverne Out.

Capt. Joe Saverine, who was out of the Maryland game with an injured leg, will witness the season's finale from the bench. Hopes that he would be able to resume his old half-back position were dashed yesterday by his physician's report that the injury would be aggravated if he played. Bob Ferrarra will replace him.

Seven members of the squad will play their last game for Georgetown this afternoon. Saverine, Chubby Parcells, Mike Chappa, Frank Williamson, Al Cohen, Joe Kelliher and Bill Downer, all regulars, are slated to receive their diplomas next June.

Terrors Are Favored.

Western Maryland is rated a 2-1 favorite over the Washington eleven, but if the Hoyas are right it will be a dog-fight. The Terrors defeated Mount St. Mary's Thanksgiving Day, 26-0, while Georgetown has had only workout this week. However, Hagerty risked the loss of practice against staleness.

Against Catholic U., which was defeated, 2-0, the up-Staters showed a powerful line that was well nigh impregnable, with a quartet of hard-running backs led by Bill Shepherd, a candidate for the All-American. This will be Shepherd's last game, too, and he is expected to try and boost his scoring mark, which is the best in the country.

Chappa May Not Play.

There is a strong possibility that Mike Chappa, Georgetown's ace end, will be on the sidelines because of a bad ankle. Chappa was hobbling around on a cane yesterday. His loss is a terrific blow to the Hilltoppers' hopes, for Georgetown is woefully weak at the flanks.

Western Maryland aims a goodly portion of its attack at the ends with Shepherd and McNally carrying the ball. McNally, incidentally, caused Georgetown much trouble in their game last season, although Shepherd did all of the scoring.

Today's game will be the sixth between the two teams. Western Maryland has won four and Georgetown one.

75 Victories, 7 Losses, 1 Tie Neyland's Tennessee Record

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 30 (U.P.).—After nine years as University of Tennessee football coach, Maj. Bob Neyland is leaving in two weeks for the Canal Zone to do a two-year stretch for Uncle Sam.

In that sentence is packed more pathos than Tennessee football supporters have known in nine years. It's almost as bad as Delilah trimming Samson's hair as far as Tennessee's rabid gridiron adherents are concerned.

Before Neyland came to Tennessee in 1916 Tennessee football teams were pushovers for the aristocrats of Southern football. Vanderbilt, Alabama, Georgia and other Southern leaders scheduled Tennessee for a breather. But there was an abrupt about face when Maj. Neyland became Tennessee's head coach.

Lost 2 in 7 Years.

For 7 years, from 1926 through 1932, Tennessee lost only two football games, playing the stiffest kind of schedules below the Mason-Dixon line. Throughout Maj. Neyland's regime Tennessee has played 87 football games, won 75, lost 7 and tied 5. That's one of the greatest records ever made by any football coach.

Maj. Neyland's last Tennessee football team has one game left to play against Louisiana State's undefeated team here on December 8.

But Tennessee followers aren't talking about who's going to win that game. They are speculating on what's going to happen to Tennessee football after Maj. Neyland leaves and who's going to be the next head coach.

Neyland Is Sad.

Maj. Neyland is sad concerning his approaching departure for the Canal Zone, where he will spend the next two years in charge of a battalion of engineers instead of a squad of football players.

"I guess I'll be lost for a while until I adjust myself to my surroundings," said Maj. Neyland. "My Saturday afternoons will be tough every fall. I guess I'll do a lot of fishing."

Through nine years of campaigning at the head of Tennessee's football forces, Maj. Neyland will remember longest:

Two Quick Scores.

"The Tennessee-Alabama game will live longer in my memory than any other experience of my connection with football. Imagine if you can two touchdowns being scored in the first 49 seconds of play. McEver ran the opening kick-off back for a touchdown. Three plays later Alabama had a touchdown, and from there on every play packed a thrill.

"McEver was my ideal player. He never made a mental error on the football field."

Other great players developed by Maj. Neyland were Beattie Feathers, of the Chicago Bears, who is ranked the outstanding freshman in the professional league; Herman Hickman, All-American guard; Bobby Dodd, quarter back, and Buddie Hackman, half back.

1929 Team Greatest.

Maj. Neyland calls his greatest team the 1929 eleven, which won nine games, but was tied by Kentucky in an upset in the snow.

A sign on the wall of Tennessee's locker room casts considerable light on Maj. Neyland's success as a coach:

Maj. Neyland says his most successful plays of his first year in 1926 are still his best plays of 1934.

"My basic formation is the same," said Maj. Neyland.

"Any play will work if executed properly."

The interview was over and Maj. Neyland's parting word was: "You know, I'm worried about that Louisiana State game."

9 Hockey Stars Affected by Shake-up

Only Anne Townsend and Anne Pugh Remain in New Line-up.

By Ware Torrey.

NEWTONVILLE, Mass., Nov. 30 (Spl.).—Announcement of the all-American first and reserve field hockey teams at the annual association banquet tonight brought to a climax the suspense that eclipsed the day's tournament matches, in which Southeast led the Northeast Reserves, 11-0, Northeast won over Southeast Reserves, 2-1, and Great Lakes gave the Midwest a 6-2 defeat.

Nine members of last year's all-American team lost their posts in a shake-up in which only Anne Townsend, of Philadelphia, and Anne Pugh, of Baltimore, survived. The new line-up brought back several members of the touring team who were too overplayed to make the first team last year, introduced the able new material of May Howe for left inner and Marjorie Harrowell, of Great Lakes, for left wing.

Anne Page Placed.

Put in Reserves.

All-American players of last year who dropped back to the reserve team are Agnes Rodgers, who has been absent from the tournament; Elizabeth Richey, Adele Loysen, Elizabeth Taussig and Miss Elliott. Reserve players who retain second team ranking are Janet Kendig, Selina Silleck, Helena Wheeler and Miss Black. The remaining two posts of right wing and right half are filled by Anne Parry and Helen Libby.

The Southeast team swamped the Northeast reserves with an All-American caliber forward line and a backfield in which Anne Pugh, of Baltimore, added her best play of the tournament to the steady pressure of Miss Townsend and Miss Streibeigh.

Bashara and Silas To Battle Monday

2 4-Rounders Also Added to Hunt Club Card.

Two four-rounders and a special six yesterday were added to the Riding and Hunt Club boxing program for Monday night, completing the card.

Tommy Bashara, Norfolk welterweight, will engage Sid Silas in the six. In the fours, George Mackron, Scranton heavyweight, is scheduled to do battle with Jake Hudson and Sam Julian will meet Baby Charles, another Washington featherweight.

Frankie Hughes, Wisconsin welterweight, will oppose Morrie Sherman, of Chicago, in the 10-round feature bout. Norment Quarles, former North Carolina University lightweight ace, will engage Pete Galiano, of Baltimore, in an eight-round semifinal.

Stocks Creep Up One-Tenth In Less Dealing

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—Speculative interest in stocks waned today after the Thanksgiving recess and November faded quietly into Wall street history.

The slow finish was in contrast with the lively trading and rising security prices which characterized most of the month. November turnover, around 21,000,000 shares, was the heaviest since July.

Sales Volume Dwindles.

Transfers dwindled to 801,780 shares, against 1,166,550 Wednesday. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks was only one-tenth of a point higher at 75.8.

Wall street closed the books on November in a cheerful mood, compared with uncertainty and hesitation prevailing at the start of the month. Stocks, however, ran into mild profit taking at the week-end.

Demand was spotty, centering in steels, motors and industrial specialties.

The post-holiday tendency to move cautiously was also evident in bonds. The investment market was virtually stationary, although the pool of capital available for investment continued to grow with the influx of gold and the disbursement of additional extra and increased dividends.

Rise Against Dollar.

A further slight rise in gold currencies against the dollar threatened to shut off the movement of the yellow metal to the United States. The French franc was a trifle above the gold import point for New York.

Aside from corn, speculation in commodities echoed the cautious note sounded in the share market. After setting new peaks for the season, corn closed off ½ to up 1 cent a bushel in Chicago, while wheat yielded for net losses of ¾ to ½. Cotton futures in New York ended 30 to 60 cents a bale lower.

Business news, while showing additional small gains, tried the patience of stock market traders. Low-cost housing programs under discussion in Washington excited wide interest in the financial district, but it was pointed out in brokerage quarters they had not matured sufficiently to clarify their significance for security markets.

Flurries of Buying.

Late flurries of buying in steels and motors, pivoting around Chrysler and United States Steel, stirred up flashes of interest in other sections of the list. But the close was slow and uneven.

Fractional gains in United States Steel, Chrysler, International Harvester, Union Pacific and Westinghouse Electric were balanced by small losses in such issues as American Can, American Smelting, New York Central and Sears-Roebuck.

A transfer of 100 shares of United States Tobacco was recorded at 140, a leap of 16 points over the previous sale. P. Lorillard added more than a point to its previous advance, touched off by news of a $1 extra.

Woollen Company President Attacks Provisions in Industrial Codes on Restricting Outputs and Limiting Number of Working Shifts.

By Special Writer of The Post.

Section 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act declares one of the objectives of policy to be promotion "of the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries," and avoidance of "undue restrictions of production (except as may be temporarily required). Julius Forstmann, president of the Forstmann Woolen Co., has published a statement on "How to Increase Production and Employment," attacking various provisions which have been inserted in the industrial codes as a resulted of this qualified authorization to restrict output. He objects particularly to limitations upon the number of working shifts and to prohibitions upon replacement of old machinery or expansion of plant capacity. The issues which Mr. Forstmann raises in his pamphlet are among the most important that confront the country at the present time. There has been much discussion of the theoretical merits of production control and price fixing expedients as embodied in industrial codes, but in spite of attacks and criticisms, many codes contain provisions designed to restrict output and retard the pace of capital expansion. The question arises as to whether such restrictive policies are to be permitted under permanent legislation, or whether they shall be prohibited as detrimental to the public welfare.

Forstmann Presents Arguments Against Limiting Outputs.

Mr. Forstmann presents very effectively the accepted arguments against limitations upon output under code agreements. His criticisms are directed in part against the rule-of-thumb methods employed to determine the extent of overcapacity within a given industry as preliminary to deciding to what extent machine hours shall be restricted. But he chiefly objects in principle to a policy which, in his opinion, benefits only inefficient concerns. "Whether the inefficient manufacturer works long or short hours," he says, "does not increase the salability of his products in volume or dollars, unless an artificial scarcity is created by such a wholly destructive policy or production limitation." He believes that industry "should be encouraged to produce to the utmost, to bring down costs by further technological advances, the purchase of new machinery and increase in volume of output." Applying this generalization to the textile industry, Mr. Forstmann would urge those mills that have a market and an immediately available labor supply to produce to the utmost. More than that, he would give governmental and private assistance to establishments lacking facilities for multiple shift operations in order to increase their competitive strength. Then mills unable to "meet normal legitimate competition" would be forced to withdraw from the field.

The United States, however, is confronted by industrial maladjustments that can not be corrected by doctrinaire insistence upon the social value of unrestricted production, any more than they can be met by the arbitrary decisions of an organized majority of industrialists who decide what curbs shall be put upon expansion of capital equipment or utilization of existing plant capacity. If we were starting with an adequately functioning industrial system, it might be feasible to insist upon removal of all restrictions that hamper the most efficient business units. But we are attempting to extricate ourselves from a situation which threatens to ruin many concerns once regarded as reasonably efficient. Shall such establishments be permitted to go under leaving the survivors to obtain the bulk of business available, or is it not better to ease the process of adaptation to radically changed conditions by keeping a larger number of concerns at work on a restricted program?

Efforts to Restrict Output Fails in Bringing Benefits.

The fact that many industries have been attempting for years to devise ways and means of restricting output is proof that competition has failed, so far as they are concerned, to provide the automatic regulation of processes that is supposed to bring maximum benefits to society. Overdevelopment of plant capacity results in cut-throat competition, and barring restrictive agreements, it may take years to correct such conditions. Indeed, while some concerns are being forced out, capital expansion within the industry may be proceeding at a pace that insures a later crop of business failures due to overdevelopment.

The best and fullest utilization of our productive resources, therefore, will not be furthered by reverting to a system of unregulated competition which has been particularly wasteful of capital resources. For some industries competition may prove to be an effective regulator. For others, it does not work well, as is shown by the persistent efforts of business to secure modifications of the anti-trust laws legalizing agreements to control output and prices. The textile industries are among those that have suffered from the demoralizing effects of rapid development of new units in regions where labor has been relatively cheap and from the effects of rapid changes in technique. Experience seems to show that it is to the interest of these industries and of the public, too, to find a middle ground between unregulated competition and rigid restrictions that would result in a permanently higher level of costs to the public through maintenance of inefficient industrial concerns.

Bond Market Is Unchanged; At 85.1 Level

Industrials Reach Peak; Volume of Sales Cut to $10,266,000.

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—The bond market finished the month with a somewhat irregular tone today, although trading was exceptionally quiet and price changes, on the whole, were small.

Transfers totaled $10,266,000, par value, against $13,409,000 on Wednesday. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate issues was unchanged at 85.1. On the month this average was up nine-tenths of a point. The composite for 20 selected industrials edged up to another new high for the year at 84.3.

The November turnover in listed bonds amounted to $251,993,000, at par, compared with $278,238,000 in October.

Traders Extend Holiday.

The dullness of the post-holiday session was attributed largely to the fact that many traders extended their Thanksgiving Day recess over the week-end.

There were a few outstanding gainers in the corporate groups. Among these were American Type Founders 6s, up 3½ at 32; Bush Terminal 5s, up 1¾ at 27; Boston & Maine 5s, up 1 at 70; Colorado & Southern 4½s, up 1 at 71½; Columbia Gas 5s of 1952, up 2 at 83; Great Northern 4½s of 1976, up 1⅛ at 74.

International Mercantile Marine 6s, up 1 at 50; Mead Corporation 6s, up 1 at 76; Nassau Electric 4s, up 1 at 56½; Nickel Plate 6s, up 1⅝ at 66; Parmelee Transfer 6s, up 4 at 28; Pere Marquette 4½s, up 2¼ at 73¼; Republic Steel 5½s, up 1 at 97½, and Youngstown Sheet & Tube 5s, up 1 at 90.

On Losing List.

Losers of a point or so included Walworth 6s at 45, Sharon Steel Hoop 5½s at 76½, M-K-T Adjustment 5s at 34, Laclede Gas 5½s at 59¾, K. C. Southern 5s at 70, International Cement 5s at 97½, Denver & Rio Grande 5s at 21¾, Colon Oil 6s at 47½, and Certain-teed 5½s at 69.

U. S. Government securities were a trifle lower, but the turnover in this department amounted to only about $710,000.

Austrian Government 7s of 1957 advanced 3¾ points to 85 and the 7s of 1934 were up 1⅞ at 102⅞, both new highs for the past year or longer. The Argentines were also firm. Graz Municipal 8s gained 2⅛ at 107⅜. The Germans were steady.

Curb's Prices Turn Mixed; Volume Lags

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—Price changes on the Curb Exchange today were narrow and slightly mixed. Trading volume contracted.

Alcohol shares sold fractionally lower, including Hiram Walker and Distillers Corporation-Seagrams. Oils were steady. Among the lower shares, Electric Bond & Share receded a small fraction, while American Gas & Electric ended about even. New York Power & Light preferred got up 4 points in a small exchange.

Lynch Corporation rose 3½ points, while Pan American Airways and New Jersey Zinc gained around a point each. General Tire & Rubber and Pacific Tin (special) moved down rather sharply on thin offerings. Parker Rust Proof, Pioneer Gold and Swift Internacionale finished slightly lower.

Wanting Work.

To my door there came a fellow, with the road dust he was yellow; he looked weak and tired and seedy, he looked all washed up and needy. "Let me do some work," he muttered, "then give me some bread that's buttered. Let me mow your lawn, I prithee, or clean up your shed or smithy, let me dust that bust of Bryan's, or dig up some dandelions; I don't wish to eat a dinner to refresh my vitals inner, till I've done some job to pay you, so dig up some work, I pray you." "When you've trimmed those half-grown hedges I will feed you pie in wedges, I will hand you slabs of mutton that would satisfy a glutton; tea and coffee I will furnish, or fresh buttermilk that's churnish." Then to work he went, all haggard, but he stumbled and he staggered, far too weak to raise his sickle, far too weak to earn a nickel. So I said, "You're weak and beaten; I will bring you pancakes wheaten; I will bring you loaves and fishes and some other wholesome dishes. When you've eaten, if you're stronger, you may stay a half hour longer, and attempt a little hoeing where those cockleburs are growing." And that wholesome grub he polished till the larder was demolished. All the bread and meat he swallowed, and some pies and doughnuts followed. Then, instead of nobly working, he put in some fancy jerking; "These," he said, "without a question, are the pangs of indigestion. In may present sore condition I must seek a learned physician." That's the way I'm always treated; that is why I'm all up-heated.

British Treasury Order Bans Planned Ship Line

London, Nov. 30 (AP).—The British treasury placed a ban today against the proposed purchase of a number of Red Star liners by a company which planned to popularize transatlantic travel through a cheap trip between the United States and England.

The plan provided for formation of a company with a capital of approximately $2,500,000, guaranteed by financial and shipping interests. Maj. Frank Bustard, a moving spirit in the venture, said the treasury advanced as a reason for the ban the fact that the line would become a possible competitor of the Cunard and White Star Lines, which received government subsidies.
